Cover Story • Star Crossed

Love. Death. Dance.

By Michele DeVinney

One of the challenges facing not-for-profit organizations is the need for fundraising which often requires as much creativity as does the entity's actual mission. This is certainly the case for typically underfunded arts groups who need to tap into some fun and inspiring ways to attract more patrons and the money needed to fulfill their goals.

Thanks to a grant from Foellinger Foundation, Fort Wayne Dance Collective recently brought in a consultant who helped them begin the task of rebranding and refreshing their approach. They also realized they need to branch out a bit and increase awareness of what the FWDC commitment is to the community as well as build up the scholarship fund that would bring more deserving talent through their doors.

This brings us to Star Crossed, a unique event set for Friday, September 13 at the Embassy Theatre and Indiana Hotel. The idea for Star Crossed came from Sleep No More, a decidedly outside-the-box fundraiser held in New York City.

"Sleep No More is based on Shakespeare's Macbeth, and they take a warehouse and create different rooms of a hotel where each room has a different scene," says Alison Gerardot, FWDC's outreach director. "It's very elaborate, and all of the audience members wear masks while the performers themselves don't, which is how you know the audience from the performers. Our Star Crossed is not quite like that, but we used that as a guide for what we're going to do. It's very interactive, and it might take people outside their comfort zone, but that's what Dance Collective likes to do anyway – take people outside of their comfort zones."

The staging combines dance, of course, with music and theatre, with performers filling rooms to enact a story, this time another Shakespearean tragedy, Romeo & Juliet. Hence, Star Crossed. They were able to find a perfect venue for this unique experience only a few blocks away from their studios in downtown Fort Wayne.

"We knew we needed a great space to pull this off, and the Embassy was one of our first choices. We talked to Kelly Updike [the Embassy's executive director] when we first started planning this over a year ago, and because it was a fundraiser they really helped us out, so we were able to secure the space without great expense because this is, after all, a fundraiser."

The Embassy was also able to provide not only the historic theatre, but also the Indiana Hotel adjacent to their space, enabling the performers to utilize many rooms in their non-verbal portrayals in Star Crossed. Moving from one scenario to another, audience members will be asked to choose a side in the iconic Capulet and Montague battle of wills. Fort Wayne Dance Collective will be featuring many of their own fine dancers, including Executive Director Liz Monnier, as well as varied musical and theatre talent in the area, beginning with the evening's director.

"We have Greg Stieber directing which we're very excited about," says Gerardot. "He directed Les Misérables for the Civic this summer. He'll be fresh off of that at our performance, so we were really lucky to have snatched him up."

Orange Opera and Metavari, two popular local bands, will provide the soundtrack in various capacities throughout the evening. The event should prove to be an unusual night of theatre for the audience while providing a unique glimpse into a classic love story.

"People will be in the scene where they first meet, and they'll be witness to the balcony scene. It will be a modern interpretation of the story rather than a period piece, and the audience will just move from one part of the story to another alongside the actors and dancers," says Gerardot.

Providing a memorable experience is just one part of the goal, of course. The other more pressing aim is raising money to help Dance Collective build a reserve in order to help the students they work with in area schools. With a presence in South Side, Memorial Park, Wayne, Lakeside and Weisser Park, the dance organization sees many promising students who lack the means to pursue their passion for dance. Additionally, some of the current students of FWDC may need

All you've gotta do is take a look at this week's cover to know that this issue of whatzup has more things to do and see in the days and weeks ahead than Miley Cyrus has teddy bears. Dance, beer, theater, lots of theater, Led Zeppelin and write-ups on a couple of local music stalwarts. That's a whole lotta stuff.

Of course, it all starts with Thursday night's final round of whatzup/Wooden Nickel Battle of the Bands X, with four terrific bands – Blood from a Stone, Miles High, Djenetic Drift and Trackless – competing for a chance to get their next CD recorded and produced for free, courtesy of Digitracks Recording Studio and Advanced Media Integration. There's also some cash money at stake as well as Sweetwater gear, so every one of the four bands is a winner. Most importantly, this is going to be a great show, maybe the best demonstration of how deep and wide is the talent that still abides, dude, in the Fort Wayne music scene today.

Thursday is just the beginning. Check the ads and the feature stories in these 28 pages of good stuff and you're sure to find ways to keep yourself busy every single day for the next couple of weeks. Whether it's collector car auctions or Indian flautists, you're gonna find it here.

So read on, enjoy what we like to think is a very good read and enjoy all that north-east Indiana has to offer in the waning days of summer. Just do one thing for us and tell everyone you meet while you're out and about that whatzup sent you.

So Many Flavors To Savor

Feature • Oktoberfest

By Ashley Motia

The craft brew floodgates open on Saturday, September 7, as Oktoberfest returns to downtown Fort Wayne. Enjoying its 15th year of success, the event seems to grow with each passing year.

It wasn't that long ago when we were all throwing our glasses back under the tent in the Mad Anthony Brewing parking lot at Taylor Street and Broadway. Now, the full lineup of Oktoberfest events spans four days, and the festival's namesake takes place in the Headwaters Park West Pavilion.

With each incarnation, the Mad Anthony Brewing crew strives to make the festival bigger and better, and this year is no disappointment.

A ticket gets you access to more than 100 beers poured by over 30 craft brewers. This includes unlimited tasting, a souvenir glass and a stainless steel, limited edition keychain bottle opener. Mad Anthony Brewing Company's sister venture, Shigs in Pit, will offer savory barbeque fresh out of the smoker to help wash all that delicious beer down. Plus, there's a chance to win two VIP tickets to the sold-out Great American Beer Festival in Denver, Colorado, with airfare and hotel all covered. Oh, and you get to enjoy live music from the David Todoran Band and Oktoberfest tomfoolery, too.

Some brewers featured at this year's event include Bloomington Brewing Company, Crown Brewing Company, Even Czech Brewery, Flat 12 Bierwerks, Fountain Square, Granite City, Half Moon Restaurant and Brewery, Lafayette Brewing, New Albanian Brewing Company, Rock Bottom Brewery, Shoreline Brewery, Tin Man Brewing Company and Union Brewing. And, of course, Mad Anthony Brewing will represent with their usual suspects along with some surprises.

"We're making it really interesting this year," said Blaine Stuckey, Mad Anthony Brewing Company co-owner. "We'll have many familiar, favorite Mad Anthony brews, and then we will have some special tastings: a Raspberry Sour, Barrel-aged Imperial Stout, Old Crown coffee infused Old Fort Porter, Mad Anthony 15th Anniversary Ale, high gravity Imperial IPA and the Black IPA. There will be 10 to 12 Mad Anthony beers alone at Oktoberfest."

A special feature of this year's event is the Replicale Homebrew Challenge. Many of the home-brewers will submit their own unique American IPAs to this brew-off contest. These brews will be judged at to otherwise. At its heart, it's a meet-and-greet to find out what's behind the beers, why the brewers brew them and the stories behind their passion for brewing."

And Oktoberfest is the sweet cherry on top of a four-day celebration. It kicks off on Wednesday, September 4 with the Indiana Craft Beers and Hors D'oeuvres at Old Crown Coffee Roasters in the North Anthony shopping district. A $20 ticket gets you access to Figure 8 Brewing Company's Ro Shampo Imperial Red Ale, Floyd's Folly Scottish Ale by Cutters Brewing Company, Mad Anthony Brewing Company brews and Mad Anthony Old Fort Porter infused with Old Crown coffee, the traditional highlight of the event.

On Thursday, September 5 make the trek up to Angola for the Vintage Ale Release Party at Mad Anthony Lakeview Ale House. A wide range of aged vintage ales will be available for purchase throughout the evening, from six-year-old high gravity ales to last year's barley wine. This event is open to the public.

Another Oktoberfest tradition is the Golf Scramble and BBQ Dinner, held on Friday, September 6 at Bridgewater Golf Club in Auburn. After the golf outing, head over to the Fort Wayne Mad Anthony location for the release of Oktoberfest and live music with Hubie Ashcraft and Travis Gow.

And if golf isn't your thing, maybe pedaling around downtown is. The Beers and Bikes Pub Tour pedals off on Saturday, September 7 at 11 a.m. Registration begins at Don Hall's Gas House at 10 a.m. Pints (or half pints or water, pick your poison) are raised at 11 a.m. to kick things off. The group then heads to El Azteca where it splits into smaller groups to travel the route to JK O'Donnell's, Columbia Street West and 816 Pint & Slice before reaching the final destination: the Oktoberfest main event at Headwaters Park West. Bikers can expect the ride to end at 2 p.m. with them holding their glasses, ready for a good time.

"The fun part about the Beers and Bikes Pub Tour, aside from the opportunity to drink a lot of water, is decorating the bikes," Stuckey mused with a grin. "Some people pick their favorite beer and decorate with that theme. Others use the Mad Anthony theme for inspiration. The best Mad Brew decorated bike will receive $50 to Fort Wayne Outfitters and Bike Depot in addition to $50 to Mad Anthony Brewing Company. It's a lot of fun and makes for an interesting time."

Oktoberfest, with a people's choice award being given to the best IPA. The grand prize winner will receive two VIP tickets to the Brewers of Indiana Guild Winterfest event in Indianapolis, with runners-up receiving Mad Anthony Brewing and Brewers Art Supply swag.

"The Replicale Homebrew Challenge is a cool thing we've added to the lineup that's a win for everyone. We're able to get the local brewers to show off their IPA skills and let the public decide which they like best. And that's what Oktoberfest is all about: getting people involved in the art of craft beer," Stuckey explained.

"As we have an opportunity to go to all of these great brew festivals, we see these kinds of events growing each year. Interest in craft beer will continue to grow in Indiana as people become more familiar with their local breweries," he predicted. "It's Mad Anthony Brewing's pleasure to be involved with that and help facilitate it. Beers from across the country will be available at Oktoberfest, but the event gives people the opportunity to get to know local beers and brewers they might not have the opportunity

afO's Mighty Season

By Kathleen Christian

We're moving into the season of entertainment, and as theater companies all over town are dusting off their togas and 16th century bloomers, all for One Productions has dug up some classic and original shows that will delight many theater-goers for the first time.

The season begins with A Mighty Fortress, a one man, one-act play about the life of Martin Luther, written by all for One's artistic director, Lauren Nichols. Intrigued by the challenge of writing a one-act play, she penned the part for her husband, Dennis, who would later perform it around the country during afO's early touring days.

"We're putting it now, for the first time ever, on a legitimate stage with a set and lighting and new sound design and a new actor," Nichols said. "This has been a lot of fun for me to refresh and rethink the show in a lot of ways."

An afO regular and stunningly talented actor, Jeff Salisbury will play the part of Luther in A Mighty Fortress. He will portray the period of Luther's life in which he was hiding in Wartburg Castle, disguised as a knight. Throughout the show, Luther reflects on the moments and paths that brought him to where he is, while his room in the castle becomes the scene of various confrontations and interactions with invisible characters along his journey.

"You really have to picture the details going all the way back to his earliest life where he felt [a] conviction to become a monk, and the great parental disapproval," Nichols said. "His early days, the all-consuming guilt he constantly felt – he never felt he measured up to God's standard."

Despite its heavy content, Nichols says there are moments of humor to be found in the story. There's also an educational component to the show, important for a theater company that exists to entertain as well as enlighten.

"Everyone knows vaguely that there's a Lutheran Church that was founded, supposedly, by Martin Luther; but why, when and what were the circumstances, and what does it mean for the church today?" Nichols asked. "We'll be providing a synopsis of events for people to look at. In everything we do, we want the audience to understand why we think it's important."

Since A Mighty Fortress is around an hour long, it will be preceded by Prisoner of Joy, a one-act dramatization of the book of Philippians. Nichols described the show as a contemporary take on a small, persecuted church and its correspondence with its imprisoned pastor.

Prisoner of Joy will be directed under Nichols' supervision by her apprentice, Kayla Reed.

"I'm excited to have an apprentice director working alongside me for the season," Nichols said. "Our apprentice program is new, and we also have a technical apprentice working alongside Jeff Salisbury, who is our technical director."

Moving into the fall and spring, afO will take a turn for the family with The Family That Nobody Wanted and The Princess and the Goblin, two heartwarming plays the family will love. These shows have also shared obscurity the past few years.

"[The Family That Nobody Wanted] was a play that came along in the 50s but had the feeling of one of those great Kaufman and Hart comedies from the 30s and 40s," Nichols said. "This is that old, three-act comedic format which feels very much like You Can't Take it With You. It's a delightful show in its own right, though."

The play turns reality into drama. It portrays the real-life story of Helen and Carl Doss, who adopted 12 children from various ethnic backgrounds in the 40s, a time when adopting children who matched their adoptive parents' racial and religious background was considered the only way to establish a stable family. The Dosses turned trends, so-

Feature • The Flattering Word Community Theater

By Jennifer Poiry-Prough

Sometimes in theatre, art imitates life. And sometimes life imitates art. And every once in a while life imitates art while imitating life imitating art.

Such is the case with First Presbyterian Theater's upcoming benefit production of The Flattering Word by George Kelly.

The one-act comedy is about an Ohio minister and his wife. The young minister is virulently opposed to theater, believing it to be evil. They are visited by an old friend of his wife's – a famous traveling actor, who invites his friend to see him perform. She says that her husband would never allow it, but the actor says he will just ply him with the "flattering word": that is, "the one compliment that has never failed. Tell any man, woman or child that he should be on the stage – and you'll find him quite as susceptible as a cat is to catnip."

Hofrichter became familiar with the play as a student at Marquette and has been trying to find a place for it in the regular theater season, but the timing never seemed right. However, when a young minister and his wife (Jeff and Arianne Lehn) came to First Presbyterian Church, he knew the time had come.

"I asked them, 'Have you ever performed on stage?'" Hofrichter says. "They said, 'No.' I said, 'Wouldja like to?'"

The play also features Nancy Kartholl as the church busybody, Mrs. Zooker.

"The actor, played by Christopher J. Murphy, hits Mrs. Zooker with the flattering word," says Hofrichter. "Her daughter [played by Emma Grimes] has done some performing. Everyone is running around performing for the famous actor."

Hofrichter says that although they may lack the theatrical experience of the rest of the cast, "they're perfect for the roles. It's meta-theatrical in nature. Theater commenting on theater."

Consider it the 1916 version of the sitcom Community.

"During the early 20th century when the play was written, a lot of churches were campaigning against theater," Hofrichter says. "The church made them feel like low-down sinners if they attended theater. They equated it to strip clubs or burlesque."

He says Kelly wrote the play as a "response to the sanctimonious righteous who condemned theater. He was saying, 'Don't be boneheads. There's nothing inherently evil about theater.'"

Besides being a funny, energetic comedy that will appeal to all ages, says the director,

"there are lots of obligatory speeches about how wonderful theater is. It also speaks precisely to why First Presbyterian Church has a theater in the first place: the power it has to open the mind of a single person, alone in the dark." Rather than pairing it with another one-act play, as had been his intention all these years, Hofrichter chose it as the centerpiece of First Presbyterian Theater's upcoming fundraiser, which also includes a light supper, silent auction and demonstration of the new lighting system that proceeds from the event will help pay for.

"People feel cheated [by a pair of one-acts versus a single, full-length play]," he says, "which I don't understand. You're getting two plays for one."

A light supper, catered by Booker's Catering, will be served upstairs from 6 to 7 p.m.

"We call it a light supper," says Hofrichter, "but with Kevin Booker, nothing is ever really light."

A silent auction will also begin during supper. Afterward, at 7 p.m., the 40-minute play will be performed downstairs in the theater, followed by a 10-minute demonstra-

Back in the Spotlight

By Michele DeVinney

Back when she first formed the Shelly Dixon Band, Shelly Dixon found herself an instant favorite with whatzup readers, as was evident by her Whammy Awards for Best New Artist and for her band's debut CD, Drive). Dixon's powerful rock vocals led an energetic group of musicians who started out in 2000 and could have gone on forever – except for some interference from life. Dixon says now that as much as she loved the band and other aspects of her professional life, she knew she needed to step back for awhile.

"My son was little, and I owned my own painting business doing finishes and murals," she says. "It was great working in these big, beautiful homes and a privilege to be paid for art, but I needed to stop that business so I wouldn't have to take work home with me. I needed a job where I could just go to work and then come home and have a life."

Part of stepping back also meant ending the band's tenure, a difficult choice for someone so dedicated to her music. She felt the separation from the band even more keenly than she did her business.

"It was such a great group of people. They were so dedicated, and I never had to chase people down for rehearsals or worry if they were going to show up. We wrote together and played together, and they were such talented musicians. I didn't know how to deal with the loss when the band ended. You don't know how much something feeds your soul until you don't have it anymore."

In the end, music followed her into her new job at Cork 'n Cleaver. One night Jim Bordner was in the restaurant, and a conversation between the two led to Dixon giving Bordner her CD. That chance encounter helped bring Dixon back to music.

"He produces commercials and brought me in to work on some jingles, and it was nice to be paid for vocal work again. Then I decided to celebrate my 40th birthday with a show at Club Soda, and when that went over really well, it gave me that fire back. It only took a minute to know what I wanted to do."

After a few false starts at putting together another band, Dixon opted for a duo instead, and her acoustic shows with guitarist Jeff McRae every Tuesday at the Corner Pocket in Riviera Plaza have filled the void she felt after the dissolution of the Shelly Dixon Band. For the time being she's performing recognizable songs by other artists, a process she says has helped her grow as a singer.

"Jeff lets me choose whatever material I want to do, so I mostly do songs by female artists. Doing these acoustic covers has made me a better singer and performer because it's just the two of us. I don't have a bunch of people to hide behind, so it has really helped me get over my shyness when I'm performing. I think I'm more attentive to the audience now."

"I know a lot of songwriters in this town don't really want to do covers, but I really think it's teaching me a lot about singing. I do a Bob Dylan song called 'Make You Feel My Love' which Adele has recently done, too. Obviously I sing it more like Adele, but it shows how a song like that can come full circle. There's a lot of variety in the songs we cover, plus we throw in some of my originals along the way."

There may well be more originals in the future and even another version of the Shelly Dixon Band ahead. Dixon is anxious to have the best of both worlds, continuing the acoustic covers with McRae while enjoying the excitement of singing out with a full band again.

"I want to do both because they're such different entities. I got away from writing when I stopped playing with the band, and I shouldn't have done that. Now I've opened back up and have more confidence. The lesson that cover music teaches is so powerful. I learn so much from how others sing and how they write. I learn so much from singing songs by Stevie Nicks, Carly Simon, Adele, Norah Jones – the lesson from these artists is amazing. I'm starting to write again and have these little seedlings that are just waiting to be fertilized."

Dixon's perspective has changed since she began writing, as she now comes to the process as a wife (her name now is Shelly Dixon-House) and a mother. She says her age and life experiences have brought her to a new place as a songwriter.

"Life is different now than it was when I was 30, and you learn as you go. You learn to embrace yourself and express yourself differently. I think when you're younger you're so dependent on outside feedback, but now I think more about what I see, what I think of me."

Dixon has also learned from singing country music, a genre which is so rich in female vocalists to cover, and feels that country songs are very much like her own originals in their ability to tell a story. She hopes that these lessons will pay off soon with a band she sees performing all kinds of musical forms. Dixon remains soft-spoken and humble, often reiterating her gratitude for the people in her life who have made this journey possible.

"I can't do what I do without the support I get from my husband, my family and even my boss at Cork 'n Cleaver, Josh Seward. Not everyone has a boss who would be willing to work with my schedule so I can perform every Tuesday and rehearse every Monday."

Until the new band comes to fruition, it's still good to know that Dixon is once again finding ways to share her voice. She credits McRae's guitar acumen for making it easy for her to focus on her singing.

"Jeff is an amazing player. He could be on tour anywhere in the country if he wanted to be, and he believes in me and my voice. It's good to sing with someone who's a master on the guitar so I can be the master of my vocals."

Led Zeppelin for All Ages

By Mark Hunter

You could call it a kind of Gunfight at the O.K. Corral blended with some sort of torch-passing ceremony. Only without the guns. Or the ceremony. But there may just be some torch-passing.

The torch to be passed is a heavy crown indeed. (Hey. It's rock n' roll. Mixed metaphors are required!) Show up to Zepfest at 6 p.m. on Saturday, September 7 at the Plaza at the Allen County Public Library. That's where the bands Wild Nights, Soft n' Heavy, the young guns in this tale, will ride alongside Kat Bowser and the Band of Blues and the Tone Junkies, each doing their versions of Led Zeppelin tunes.

Everybody knows the Tone Junkies like to get the Led out and that Kat Bowser's got a voice made for rock n' roll. But just wait till you hear Wild Nights and Soft n' Heavy do their thing.

Both Wild Nights and Soft n' Heavy are made up of musicians younger than 20 years old. But don't let their youth fool you. Both bands are well-steeped in the tradition of rock n' roll and the way Zeppelin approached it. After all, they were brought up listening to the music their parents listened to.

"My dad raised me listening to Rock 104," said Ben Tarr, bassist and vocalist with Soft n' Heavy. "I come from a musical family."

Tarr, at 15, is not the youngest member of his band. That distinction goes to Garrett Spoelhof, 14, who plays piano and organ. But even Spoelhof is too old to claim the youngest musician at Zepfest. That honor goes to Shane Zahki, the 12-year-old drummer for Wild Nights.

Zepfest is the brainchild of Doc West. West, the voice of Rock 104 for the past three (or is it four?) decades, came up with the idea while on a trip to Jamaica.

"I went to Negril after losing Sharon (Rossi) and Buzz (Maxwell) and another close friend in a short period of time," West said. "When I go to Jamaica I go with the goal of coming back and making my life or someone else's life better. This time I decided to embrace the younger kids who are embracing older rock. We had such a success when we did the young guns contest with Joe Bonamassa [that] I figured this would work great too."

So West turned to Sweetwater Sound and the Sweetwater Academy of Music. That's where Wild Nights had its beginnings.

Megan Crawford, the lead singer for Wild Nights, attended the academy on a whim. She had had years of performing musical theater but wasn't sure if delving into rock n' roll was going to be her thing. It was.

"I started performing at Snider," said Crawford, who is 19. "My dad brought home the flier for the rock camp. I did it and then I realized how much I love rock 'n roll.

Rock is so powerful. You don't just play the music. You become the music. I found my love."

Joining Crawford and Zahki (who sounds like he's been playing "way too long," according to Crawford) in Wild Nights are Patrick Mathews, 16, on guitar, Sam Mathews, 15, on bass, and Austin Marsh, 17, on guitar.

"My guitarist, Patrick, suggested we do a Zeppelin song," Crawford said. "He asked if I knew 'Heartbreaker.' I said 'what's 'Heartbreaker?'" When Crawford watched a video of Led Zeppelin doing "Heartbreaker," she was nearly heartbroken. "I don't think I can do this," she told Mathews. "Then I told him if he could play that solo, I'd sing it."

Mathews played that solo. More Zeppelin tunes found their way into Wild Nights' repertoire. "At one point we actually thought about becoming a Led Zeppelin tribute band," Crawford said.

Soft n' Heavy have been together about a year-and-a-half. Like Wild Nights, Soft n' Heavy have played gigs around Fort Wayne at places like C2G, CS3 and on WBOI's Meet the Music. Unlike Wild Nights, Soft n' Heavy got together the old fashioned way.

"We met jamming at a gig," Tarr said of his introduction to guitar player Atticus Sorrell, who is 18. "After the show he texted me and said we should form a band. We got together, learned some covers We got off to a fast start. We're already writing our own songs."

Joining Tarr, Spoelhof and Sorrell is Bray Coughlin, 16, on drums. Tarr, Spoelhof and Coughlin played together in a jazz band before adding Sorrell to the mix. As for their connection to Led Zeppelin, it just seemed natural.

"I just love their unique sound," Tarr said. "You can put them into so many genres. They do heavy power chords, string blues. They are just so great. It's a real honor being asked to play at Zepfest."

Anyone who has seen Kat Bowser perform knows she not only hits the right notes, she kayos them. Bowser, a world-class vocalist who's opened for Tony Bennett and does tons of session work, developed a blues/rock show while living in Nashville. That show includes not only Janis Joplin, but other per-

Wooden Nickel CD of the Week

JOHN MAYER Paradise Valley

John Mayer's sixth solo studio album stakes a claim to maturity and stability. With blues, soul and a hint of country, he dispenses with the extended jams he's known for. Paradise Valley is a tender display of mutual affection (like the single with girlfriend Katy Perry), yet also contains fury and attitude. Available at all Wooden Nickel locations for $11.99.

David Todoran

True

I remember 1998 like it was yesterday, and I remember how I enthusiastic I was back then about the future of Americana. Lucinda Williams' Car Wheels on a Gravel Road was brand new, and it proved that there was a place for rootsy grit within the confines of popular music. Wilco were in the process of translating the No Depression vibe of its first album into the retro jangle of Summerteeth, and on the local scene, David Todoran released Solstice, solid evidence that he knew where American music had been and where it was going, and that he knew how to tie the two together. It was a giddy time for fans like me.

And then everything went dark. Williams took three years to follow up Car Wheels, and she stumbled a bit when she did. After Summerteeth and the departure of Jay Bennett, Wilco turned their back on songs that Jeff Tweedy disdainfully referred to as "rockers" and focused instead on feedback- and rumble-laden jams. And just five years after Solstice, Todoran went quiet, too. Now we've come forward a decade, and what passes for rootsy pop music these days is made by American hipsters imitating British bands that are imitating American folk music. I'm not so giddy any more.

To say that True, Todoran's new album, picks up the ball that Wilco left on the court after Summerteeth sounds like hyperbole, but it's exactly what I'm thinking as I listen to the collection of jangly, poppy tracks. Everything I was so excited about 15 years ago is here: the acute awareness of history, the just-right level of production, the disarming juxtaposition of moods. What feels best about the music is its sincerity; there's irony in the combination of somber lyrics with bright melodies, but the affection for old pop forms is anything but ironic.

Take the opening track, for example. Todoran may sing that his love is "all butterflies and rain," but somewhere under the bouncy refrain, which could have been drawn straight from the Monkees' catalog, there's a weight that borders on melancholy. It may seem shiny on the surface, but I'm not buying it.

Throughout True, Todoran channels post-British-invasion 60s pop, throwing in everything from bubble gum to psychedelia. I'm hearing post-Pepper Beatles and Neil Young (or at least CSNY), The Who and maybe even a touch of Zeppelin. I'd still call it Americana, but it's a very cosmopolitan kind of Americana. More importantly, it's not historic pop seen through the eyes of a kid who's getting the news third-hand. It's smart, it's worldly and it's right on the money. (Evan Gillespie)

The Love Language

Ruby Red

Stuart McLamb is one of the good guys. Like many other indie rock luminaries over the last 20 years, McLamb began The Love Language as just a guy recording personal songs in his bedroom. Very personal and emotional, the first Love Language album was a breakup album of sorts, filled with rough little pop gems that caught the attention of music listeners in 2009. So in 2010 McLamb got to record in a real studio with a real producer. The result was Libraries, a stunning pop gem that showed McLamb wanted to make The Love Language more than just a DIY project to help him mend a broken heart.

The Love Language seem to have no plans of going back to the lo-fi bedroom pop they started out making. Ruby Red is the biggest and brashest of McLamb's projects but still retains the emotional heft and intimacy that made The Love Language so endearing to begin with. The difference is immediate with Ruby Red.

For starters, album opener "Calm Down" is a driving chunk of fist-pumping momentum. It's an arena rock scorcher minus the cheesy bravado. Full of immediacy and desperation, it's a stunning track that brings to mind Here We Go Magic's "The Collector," minus the Krautrock tendencies. The last minute and a half is a full-on instrumental breakdown, full of cymbal bashing and strings coming to a climactic crescendo. It's stunning, honestly. "Kids" follows it with a junkyard stomp pop swagger and a distant reverb that seems to envelop a mini orchestra in the background. Further down the

BACKTRACKS

The Byrds

Mr. Tambourine Man (1965)

A couple of months before I was born, folk rock was introduced to The Byrds. In 1965 folk music was alive and well, but this release sort of "plugged in" and created a new ripple of music that was only relevant to the coffee shops of Greenwich Village. With a couple of Dylan covers and some Pete Seeger, the band relied heavily on Missouri native Gene Clark to write a few songs for this debut record. Clark delivered, and this has since become one of the best releases from the mid 60s.

With the title track as the opener, you get Clark, Jim (Roger) McGuinn and a 23-year-old David Crosby creating some passionate harmonies in front of heavy folk guitars that just sway into the next song, "I'll Feel a Whole Lot Better." Dylan's "Spanish Harlem Incident" follows, and the rest of side one has a groovy vibe that closes with Seeger's "The Bells of Rhymney."

More Dylan follows on side two with "All I Really Want To Do" and "Chimes of Freedom," but Clark still glows in his writing prowess with "I Knew I'd Want You" and the psychedelic pop number "It's No Use." The 30-minute album closes with Ross Parker's World War II classic "We'll Meet Again." This song has been covered throughout the years and was featured (the Vera Lynn version) in Stanley Kubrick's 1964 classic Dr. Strangelove and Pink Floyd's The Wall.

The Byrds produced about a dozen albums with a dozen members before disbanding by way of other projects in 1973. They did a few reunion tours, but egos and poor health cheapened the original sound. Clark later drank himself to death and passed in 1991.

Fun Fact: The Byrds were self-described "Dylan meets The Beatles" to promoters and record labels. (Dennis Donahue) pike is an almost angst-y track called "First Shot" which sounds like something The Walkmen would've written in a more pensive state of mind. "For Izzy" is a real treat. It's a lilting pop track full of that Southern charm and lovelorn melancholy that McLamb is so good at with distant strings, plunked piano chords in the chorus and ethereal vocal harmonies that put this song in the purple, dusky skies of North Carolina. "On Our Heels" has an almost 80s feel, something like Eurhythmics gone all Southern Gothic. "Pilot Light" ends the album on a heart-swelling note, with Polyphonic Spree grandiosity and strings ebbing and flowing till the very end.

Ruby Red is bigger for sure, but it never loses the emotional center that has always drawn folks to McLamb's indie pop-rock earnestness. The Love Language have given us an album we can all understand. You just have to listen. (John Hubner)

Deerhunter

Monomania

At this point I'm almost tired of writing about Deerhunter brainchild Bradford Cox. This super skinny guy is one of the geniuses of his time, and he releases a great record once, sometimes twice, a year. Each time he puts some sort of wax out into the world it's slightly better than his last masterpiece – or at least it feels that way when you're getting to know it. The thing about Cox is that he's maybe too good. Too consistent. Too regular. We've come to count on 10 to 12 great indie rock tracks a year from the guy so much so that I think we're starting to take his greatness for granted. I sorta wish he would disappear for three years and then resurface with his OK Computer. He's got that kind of power in him, and he's certainly come close to such heights in the past.

Monomania, Deerhunter's latest, is, of course, a killer record. But we knew it would be. It's a rough, jagged, accessible version of the often atmosphere-obsessed, usually moody Deerhunter. This is basically their version of straight-ahead indie rock. It's Cox singing through a layer of beautiful studio grit and his best set of lyrics to date.

The record kicks off with the instantly lovable "Neon Junkyard," a dirty rock n' roll track with swagger to spare. It's the kind of track I imagine Mick Jagger and Keith Richards would listen to on the jukebox if they still spent friendly time together listening to music. It's the track I'm certain Robert Pollard listens to when he's not listening to himself or The Beatles. I won't say it's a beautiful song, because it's not; but I will call it cool. "Neon Junkyard" is the kind of track that will probably play in a Danny Boyle movie someday during a very cool, trippy, timeless scene. Maybe junkies will be involved, maybe they won't. But something offbeat will be happening to the sound of this very offbeat piece of rock n' roll perfection. And then, next up, there's this song called "Leather Jacket II" that I won't even talk about. You just have to hear it. It's an epic arrangement of rock n' roll noise and melody perhaps unlike anything you've heard.

Another track that stood out instantly for me (and, I assume, every Deerhunter fan who has heard the record) is "Dream Captain," without a doubt my Song of the Year thus far and maybe my favorite track I've heard since Cox's own "Coronado" hit the veritable streets in 2010. "Dream Captain" is a bouncy, soaring rock song that sees Cox in slimy rock star mode, practically spitting his vocals over the simplest, coolest rock arrangement of the year. It's a lean, chugging song that feels like the work of a master.

And how about "Back to the Middle?" Another anthem. I'm sure, if he wanted to, Cox could sell this track for use in TV commercials, TV shows, video games and films. No problem. It's so poppy, so anthemic. So instantly classic sounding. There's a big riff, those killer guitar solos and, again, Cox with those gritty, spit-y, sassy verses. And yes, of course, a huge hook. One of the biggest in the band's already classic discography. But that's about enough of this song-by-song swooning. Every track here holds merit. There's diversity and, thanks to the gritty mono sound throughout the record, there's cohesion. There are pop songs, rock songs and artsy songs.

Every time Deerhunter put out an album I call it their best, and I feel the same about Monomania. Cox and the Deerhunter kids just keep on getting more interesting and more accessible. I even read where one writer said that Monomania sounds like a later-era Pavement album with Cox singing, and, well, I haven't been able to forget that description ever since. That's pretty much what this is, I suppose. It's a timeless, slightly ragged, jangly, poppy, slightly whimsical indie rock record that I'm fairly sure classic rock, punk rock and art rock fans alike will all enjoy very much. It's yet another masterwork from our generation's David Bowie/Stephen Malkmus hybrid.

Most importantly, Monomania is just a damn enjoyable time at the stereo. (Greg W. Locke)

Majical Cloudz

Impersonator

They call this stuff "glitch-pop." What's glitch-pop? Well, nothing. It's just another thing. Another buzz term that sort of caught on thanks to music journalists and bloggers. Remember "scream-o?" Didn't think so.

And pretty soon you'll forget chillwave and glitch-pop, too. From what I gather, glitch-pop is reference to 90s glitch music, but with a pop slant: proper hooks and verses set to the sound of glitched audio source material such as electric hums, distortion, bit reduction, bugs and all that mysteriously un-music-y stuff.

The thing is, Impersonator isn't a pop record and hardly registers as anything close to glitch. Not to my ears. It kind of sounds like a mix of Liars, The Walkmen and maybe Antony and the Johnsons.

Frontman Devon Welsh has a strong voice that demands to be the center of attention at almost every turn. It howls — one part Ian Curtis, two parts Hamilton Leithauser — over effective minimalist productions that live and die on vintage synths. Here and there, drum machines that hardly ever form a proper rhythm clunk along like it's 1983.

This minimalist thing may be the next trend. Spoon have been doing it for years, and Wire did it decades ago. Take a whole lot of big ideas and make a huge production, then bring in some fresh ears to help you strip the whole thing down to the most interesting, most essential parts. I like it. I like it a whole lot, and Welsh does it incredibly well. Not Spoon well, but in that rare ballpark. Accenting Welsh's powerful vocals and smart production are some seriously personal lyrics. Maybe not quite as personal as, say, Perfume Genius, but definitely up there with the Youth Lagoon and James Blakes of the world. The difference is that, to me at least, Welsh seems a whole lot more mature than the Genius, Blake or the Youth Lagoon kid. He has more perspective, more restraint, more power.

The greatest accomplishment here for Majical Cloudz is the diversity we hear during their record's 39-minute playtime. Despite keeping things very lean, we never hear them repeating themselves compositionally. Sure, Welsh's vocals do begin to grate a bit as you're getting to know the record, but that's just a part of the learning curve with such a sound. The more you get to know these tracks and the universe Majical Cloudz exist in, the more their beats and nuances start to add up into grandness. The goal, when doing something minimal, should be to hint at something larger. To beautifully blueprint a skyscraper. The sketches of a sculpture. That's this record — a blueprint, a sketch. It's the backbone without the skin, without even the muscle. The heart and the skeleton, and it sounds great. Impersonator isn't a pop record like the one-sheet will tell you, but it is an album that might feel like a pop record once you're familiar with it. That's the grandness. That's the skyscraper. (Greg W. Locke)

White Fence

Cyclops Reap

It seems the older I get, the harder it has become for me to write album reviews. When I was, say, 21, I could easily burp up 1,200 passionate words about a record without hardly a second thought; today I manage a strong 600. Sure, the reviews I wrote at age 21 are even worse than the ones I write today; but they came easily. These days the critique of any art has become a twisty mind game. When records are the topic, things get especially convoluted. I don't want to describe the songs themselves or compare the band or record to anything too directly. I find that boring. I don't want my "voice," or whatever, to sound like anyone else's, and I most definitely want the reader to enjoy each review. The real goal is simple: somehow share both the essence of the album and my feelings about it in an at least somewhat interesting manner. That's it. (Also, dude, note to self: try not to repeat yourself too much.) So, needless to say, I've made it hard on myself by trying to keep things both simple and principled. Medication doesn't help; nor do booze or louder volumes.

Its records likes White Fence's Cyclops Reap that I find the hardest to review. I can tell you for certain

The Train To Roll Again in September

A humongous set of acts will be performing at the 5th annual Brandanza beginning at 3 p.m. Saturday, September 14 at Portside Pizza (5310 N. Old 102) north of Columbia City. This event came together to honor the memory of Brandon Wade Minier who passed away in 2009 from injuries he sustained in a motorcycle accident and has been a success ever since. Set to perform will be I, Wombat, Blue Bird Revival, Miles High, Jerome Schooley, Left Lane Cruiser, White Trash Blues Revival and the return of the almighty Strut Train. Aww yeah, that's right. The Train will be running once again. As a matter of fact, the guys reunited back in 2009 to perform this very same event. Besides the live music, Brandanza will also feature a hog roast, silent auction/raffle, face painting and plenty of fun for the kids. All the action costs just $10 a person or $20 per family, with kids 12 and under free. The cost of admission includes entrance to the event, food and beverages (excluding alcohol). Half of the funds raised will go to the Minier Children Education Fund and half to the Rentschler family whose son is battling orbital rhabdomyosarcoma, a childhood cancer. In addition to the event, there will also be a kickball tournament this year at Columbia City's Morsches Park (south on State Road 205 from U.S. 30) on the Saturday prior to Brandanza. Call all your buds, get a team together and watch for details on the Brandanza Facebook page.

From Columbia Street to Columbia City — Strut Train will actually be making a weekend out of their reunion as they'll be hitting the C Street stage Friday the 13th, the night before Brandanza, for what is sure to be a party like no other. It's going to be good to see the crew — Duane Alexander, Dave P, Ian Mosher, Tony Timms and Matt Cashdollar — together again. The show will also feature Unlikely Alibi and U.R.B. Like I said, gonna be a killer show. Let's just hope we see more of ST in the near future.

Five of our area's premiere acoustic acts come together on the afternoon of Saturday, September 7 (1 p.m.) for a Wooden Nickel in-store performance. Thank You & Goodnight, Will Certain, Bradley Duer, Smoke & Mirrors and The Victim, The Witness will all perform for this free all-ages event. I can't think of a better afternoon than shuffling through vinyl and listening to some fine music.

Not sure about you but I'm so over pre-season football and ready for the real deal. In a couple of weeks, the kickoff of the 2013-2014 season will begin, and my Sundays will consist of nothing more than football, friends and ice cold beer. If you're a Colts supporter like Wooden Nickel's Bob Roets, then you might want to make it down to their first ever kickoff party on Friday, September 6 in downtown Indianapolis. The free event is open to the public and will feature Colts cheerleaders, giveaways, Bud Light Boardwalk Beer Garden and a performance by multi-Platinum recording artists Gin Blossoms. That's a name I haven't heard in quite some time, and I'm glad to hear they're still out on the road. The band is best known for their hits "Hey Jealousy," "Found Out About You," "Allison Road," "Until I Fall Away," "Til I Hear It from You" and "Follow You Down." The party takes place on the west block of Georgia Street between Illinois Street and Capitol Avenue. The Colts start the season a couple days later when they host the Oakland Raiders.

Korn have announced a few dates to precede the release of their new album, The Paradigm Shift. A couple of dates are in the region, with the band visiting Detroit October 1 and Chicago the following night. The Paradigm Shift features the return of guitarist Brian "Head" Welch into the Korn machine, and, if the title of the record indicates anything, the band will heading in a new direction with its music. That's usually not a good thing, but you never know. The Paradigm Shift hits store shelves October 8. Asking Alexandria and Love and Death open the shows.

Keith Urban has announced the final leg of his Light the Fuse tour, with most dates taking place after the New Year. The American Idol judge will visit Toledo on November 24 before making his way to Grand Rapids' Van Andel Arena January 9 and Chicago's United Center January 10, his only dates in the area. After that you'll have to settle for watching him critique karaoke singers on Fox for about five months. Little Big Town and Dustin Lynch open the shows.

I guess money really can come between friends. Bon Jovi's Richie Sambora missed some tour dates earlier this year due to "personal reasons," but now it looks like the guitarist's exit from the band has become permanent. While it has been written that Sambora's earlier exit was to treat "exhaustion" and to get his sobriety back, rumors have been circulating for months that the real problems were more about money than exhaustion and alcohol. One website unearthed evidence that supports this theory. According to the website, Sambora was making about $2 million a month plus 20 percent of profits from each show while on tour with Bon Jovi, while Sambora's replacement, some guy named Phil X, is making $10,000 a month. It's not difficult to figure out which number the rest of Bon Jovi probably likes better, is it? I mean, if all you're doing is playing your hits and not making new music, why not have some other guy play the notes and pad your bank accounts a little more? Right? They do call it a music business after all. Not a music friendship.

Two of my favorite things, sports and music, may collide when Metallica play "Enter Sandman" at New York Yankee's pitcher Mariano Rivera's retirement party at Yankee Stadium September 22. Though nothing is confirmed yet, "Enter Sandman" is Rivera's signature entrance music, and Metallica will be in town the night before playing a show at the legendary Apollo Theatre. It sounds like a perfect match. Oh, and it will be a great opportunity for Metallica to promote their 3D movie as well. It's a virtual perfect storm.

assistance in studying beyond Fort Wayne, and scholarships to Indiana University's summer intensive program can help them move to the next level.

Tackling such a big project (which they hope to make an annual event) has been hard work for Gerardot and the staff at FWDC. They hope doing something innovative will help bring new interest to what they're doing already in Fort Wayne.

"This is definitely not your typical fundraiser," says Gerardot. "We didn't want to do the typical banquet or performance where people just sit down and watch. We wanted something a little bit edgier, something that will appeal to the Gen X and millennial generations a bit, though we certainly hope that people of all ages come to see what we're doing."

Attendance for the event has been capped at 300, so if you're anxious to check out a dynamic new piece of theatre, it's best not to wait too long. Romeo and Juliet await your arrival.

ciety and notions of racial segregation on their heads, revolutionizing the tired, dusty ideas of the adoption community.

In the spring Nichols will be brushing the dust off the cover of the classic children's tale The Princess and The Goblin. This story is a whimsical journey with goblins, dragons, magic and romance and will lead the audience through mysterious caverns and grand places. Nichols is planning a visual feast complete with a fantastical set, dancers and puppets.

"This is a lovely story that has lots of nice subtext and good messages, but on the surface it's just a ripping good fantasy story with lots of action."

The season will end on a much more somber note with the stage adaptation of George Orwell's 1984. Set in a dystopian world, 1984 tells the story of Winston Smith who, though an agent of Big Brother, is terrified of its reach and power. This compelling story will show you the world through Smith's life as he struggles with fear and suspicion of Big Brother, attempts to understand and defy the governing body and searches for simple happiness. Though this classic has been around for many decades, it never ceases to be proven fresh and relevant by developments in government and culture, especially of late.

"It's a cautionary tale about people giving up liberty for security, and I think that is always a danger and people need to be aware of it," Nichols said. "What are they selling? What are they selling out for? Security is very appealing."

Though the story is well-known, the stage adaptation, written with the approval of Orwell himself, will be new to many in the area.

It's exciting to see an entire season of shows that diverge from usual theatrical standards. It will be both an entertaining and edgy season, with offerings of family, fantasy and fun to attract patrons old and new.

tion of the new lighting system. At 8 p.m., the guests will return upstairs for a dessert buffet and the conclusion of the silent auction.

Auction items will be bundled and will include a vacation rental at Lake George, handyman and housecleaning services, TinCaps hats, a Komets jersey, tickets to concerts from Live Nation and to local and regional theater events and "lots of interesting art," says Hofrichter.

The theater has already raised $120,000 of the $200,000 necessary to complete the lighting renovation. This benefit will help to raise the other $80,000 needed to fully replace the theater's 25-year-old lighting system.

"Right now we have a mix of old and new lights," says Hofrichter. "Everything has to be rewired. The new lights all have their own computers. A master computer in the booth communicates with each lighting position."

The most expensive of the lights costs $7,000; Hofrichter hopes to purchase two of them. When completed, it will be one of the most sophisticated lighting systems in the Midwest, he says, "and maybe the most sophisticated of any community theater in the country."

Tickets to the benefit are $125 for non-members and $15 for members. This pricing structure takes into account the $115 cost of a membership ($100 for seniors), plus $15 to cover dinner. Season membership includes a six-ticket flex pass for the 2013-14 season (Fox on the Fairway, Mrs. Packard, A New Christmas Revue, Driving Miss Daisy, Othello and Misalliance). Non-subscribers can also make a $110 tax-deductible gift in lieu of the dinner. Patrons under 21 can get in for a $15 donation.

"This show is perfect for kids," adds Hofrichter, whose Theatre Audiences Today program allows dozens of area students to see First Pres shows for free. "It's an energetic, silly comedy that subtly teaches a lesson about the power of theater."

Blue Jasmine Is Woody in Top Dramatic Form

Can you rattle off your top 10 favorite Woody Allen movies without trying too hard? If you can, you may have already seen Blue Jasmine, Woody's new movie. If you like Woody Allen movies but aren't a fanatic, I recommend Blue Jasmine, but see it before too many people tell you how wonderful it is. They aren't wrong, but Blue Jasmine isn't a lighthearted romp.

Blue Jasmine is Woody working in top form in his dramatic mode. There are moments when you laugh, but they smack up against truly chilling moments. What we watch is a woman losing her mind. Well, she's really already lost her mind. What we see is her increasing inability to hide the fact that she's lost her mind. And we see her growing realization that she suspects that she has lost her mind.

Several hallmarks of great Allen films are in play in Blue Jasmine. Allen's script, of course, is smart with great dialogue. It moves back and forth in time. Jasmine wants out of the present, and her slip-sliding into the past makes easy sense. The story is tight. There isn't an extra moment, though there are some plot twists and conventions that exist and work only in Woodyland.

Blue Jasmine riffs on A Streetcar Named Desire, but not in an annoying way. You don't need to know or care about Streetcar to enjoy Blue Jasmine, but Jasmine is an un-nerving modern Blanche. We aren't given a full-on Stanley. Since there is no modern Brando, Woody has wisely created two guys, each a kind of "Stanley light."

With such good material, the actors hit every mark. Allen is famous for his ability to get Oscars and Oscar nominations for his actors, and it is a pleasure to see talented people knock it out of the park.

Cate Blanchett plays, or inhabits or transforms, into Jasmine. I don't want to pile on to the mounting praise, but she is tremendous in this role. I'm sure fall will bring much competition, but this is the performance of the year so far. Jasmine isn't likable, but Blanchett makes her incredibly sympathetic and hugely frustrating.

In ways refreshing and infuriating, Jasmine has no desire or ability to "lean in." Jasmine, who grew up as Jeanette but renamed herself something less common, is a woman who was once quite wealthy and privileged. Her world was the Upper East Side with all the best trappings.

That world is shattered when her husband Hal (Alec Baldwin) is convicted of fraud. His investment business turns out to be an elaborate ponzi scheme. Jasmine seemingly had no knowledge of his crimes. These two are modeled on the Madoffs.

We meet Jasmine as she is flying to San Francisco to move in with her sister. She is broke, distraught and highly medicated. At first her identity crisis seems more amusing than tragic. She's wearing Chanel and her luggage is Louis Vuitton. She's flying first class. It is easy to laugh at her cluelessness and dislike her condescension.

She recoils at the sight of her sister's barely middle-class surroundings in an apartment in an iffy neighborhood. She recoils at the noise of her sister's loud sons. In flashback, she recoils at the presence of her sister and her sister's lout of a husband when they visited New York.

Her sister, Ginger, is played by Sally Hawkins. (Allen is especially good at getting nominations and Oscars for supporting players, and Hawkins may increase that number.) Ginger and Jasmine are not biological sisters; both were adopted. They grew up together but hardly the same. Ginger's ex-husband is played by Andrew Dice Clay, and he's surprisingly good.

Ginger's current boyfriend, Chili, a cute, younger version of the loutish Stanley type, is played by Bobby Cannavale. He's also wonderful. As is Louis C.K. who plays a potential new suitor for Ginger. This sets Chili off. He's had enough of Jasmine's attitude and thinks it is rubbing off on Ginger.

As Blue Jasmine continues, we learn more about how much Jasmine has lost. Hal wasn't just a business cheat. He was an obvious and frequent philanderer. Her husband isn't just in jail; he committed suicide in jail. Her stepson, whom she genuinely seemed to care about, has disappeared, declaring he never wants to see her again.

Jasmine isn't just without any job skills. She and everyone around her seem to be completely, improbably computer illiterate. (This is Woody Allen's world.) She's completely without basic life skills or any instinct for self-preservation or progress.

No one ever even tries to get Jasmine to slow down on the Xanax and vodka. She has flashes of awareness, but they are rare. She can't successfully dodge the sexual harassment of her dentist boss, a perfectly smarmy Michael Stuhlborg.

Even when she meets Dwight (Peter Sarsgaard), a widowed diplomat who falls for her, she can't do anything but continue to self-destruct. She lies and lies and gets caught, in part because, though he's the best thing she has seen since Hal, she cannot get outside her head.

You get no flavor of San Francisco from Blue Jasmine, even though Jasmine keeps saying how beautiful the city is. There are a few shots from prime real estate looking at the water, but not much more.

Allen just doesn't love San Francisco the way he loves NYC. He doesn't love Jasmine the way he loves some of his previous female characters. When we leave Jasmine, she is still sinking — in a very bad, but perhaps inevitable way.

My top ten Woody Allen movies? 1. Annie Hall, 2. Manhattan, 3. Hannah and her Sisters, 4. Midnight in Paris, 5. Bullets Over Broadway, 6. Crimes and Misdemeanors, 7. Broadway Danny Rose, 8. A Midsummer Night's Sex Comedy, 9. The Purple Rose of Cairo, 10. Mighty Aphrodite, or maybe To Rome With Love. It is kind of a tie for number 10.

As it sinks in, Blue Jasmine may creep on to the list, but I favor the comedies. Still, I am a fanatic, and I rejoice that after two charming comedies comes Blue Jasmine, a movie no one could make but Woody Allen.

formers from rock's late 60s and early 70s heyday. But until Doc West approached Bowser about doing a Zeppelin tribute, she'd never sung a Zeppelin song.

"We did a two-hour Zeppelin show at C2G in May," said Mark Hornsby, a Sweetwater producer and the bass player in the Band of Blues. "We did that show for Doc."

Along with Hornsby, the Band of Blues includes, Mitch Gallagher on guitar, Nicholas Morrow on drums, Jeff Gastineau on keys and Bob Bailey, guitar. All work at Sweetwater.

With the Sweetwater resources available to them, Bowser et al, were able to put together an authentic Zeppelin tribute, right down to the specific type of equipment used on the original Led Zeppelin recordings. They may not be as authentic for the Zepfest gig. That, he said, is mainly about the music and supporting the other bands who will be performing.

"I love it when I see kids being that young and doing this music. And Kat thinks the world of Doc West. She feels if Doc is behind it, it's worth doing," said Hornsby.

As for the Tone Junkies, well, Doc West said it best. "The Tone Junkies always put their unique twist on Zep."

Craig Guy, guitarist and lead singer for the Tone Junkies, said they've been doing Led Zeppelin songs for years.

"We do take some liberties," he said.

In addition to the normal Tone Junkies lineup of Guy, Travis Brown on bass and Steve Johnson on drums, Guy said a new band, Monkey Truck, with Jamie Simon and Brian Lemert, will take a crack at a few Zeppelin tunes as well.

"I'm really tickled Doc asked us to do this," Guy said. "We're gonna try to put on a good show. I kind of want to dig deeper into their later stuff."

West said he thinks showcasing younger bands is something Rock 104 will do more of.

"You expect Rock 104 to support bands like the Tone Junkies. But you don't expect young bands like Wild Nights and Soft n' Heavy to have the rock chops. You expect the gray-haired people to enjoy this music. It's great to have young people getting into it too."

that I like this one-man rock n' roll project very much. I reviewed all three 2012 White Fence releases and loved them all to varying degrees. That said, when I went back and read my reviews of those albums after a year of listening, I disliked nearly every sentence I wrote. I didn't miss the mark as much as I bore myself to sleep. This is just a hard band to talk about in an interesting way. It should be so simple: they play a 60s-influenced style of indie garage rock that people other than myself often compare to The Kinks. Boom! That's about it.

I read where one very smart critic claimed that this new record sounds like a lost demo tape Ray Davies made in his early 20s. I don't agree, though I do think Cyclops Reap is the exact kind of record a person who might like such a demo tape would certainly enjoy. But no, this Tim "White Fence" Presley guy has his own thing going on (and it only sounds a little bit like The Kinks). That's his biggest accomplishment, even - that he's doing a style of music that's been done so much, yet still has a signature set of intangibles that are so hard to define.

Last year's two-volume Family Perfume set was, I think, Presley's coming out party. It was 29 tracks of retro, rough-cut rock n' roll that often felt both lo-fi and psychedelic. A beautiful mess of passionate, ramshackle oddball pop rock. Presley's raspy, whisper-y vocals complement his subtly blazing guitar licks in a very throwback, Syd Barrett sort of way. But, again, Presley is definitely his own dude. He's as much Barrett as he is Allah-Las or Ray Davies or even Dan Treacy. He's a low-key art house stoner type who self records neo-psych pop songs that feel very timeless and cool. His fuzzy bedroom records are somehow simultaneously both rockin' and mellow.

Okay, now I'm exhausted. This getting old thing is a drag, but, also, this describing indescribable bands thing is a trip. Maybe it's easiest to break my own rules and just say that I'm pretty sure you'll like Cyclops Reap if you like any of the other artists listed in this review. Or Velvet Underground or Guided by Voices or Ty Segall or The Creation or The Small Faces or even The Animals. Presley's sound doesn't always feel as forward as the other bands so shamefully mentioned here, but after a few spins you'll hear through the cloud of static and echo and start to really pick up on the pop structures.

Cyclops Reap has become, after maybe a week of casual listening, one of my most loved new records of 2013. It's a pretty hazy time in popland, but it's also a very warm, cozy and rocking 37 minutes of stereo time. Another big winner, I say, for the forever underrated White Fence. (Greg W. Locke)

The Value of Theater

"The Twelve Dancing Princesses" folktale originated in Germany, with variations in France, Scotland and Russia — all of them boring. That this formulaic Pabulum was so popular proves Thomas Hobbes' description of Olde Worlde life as "nasty, brutish and short." Evidently, any pathetic story was better than real life. But the story has and fills a need particular to our time as well: the usual shortage of boys but excess of girls at a typical musical theater audition, especially girls who have taken years of dance and, as little girls, loved all things princess.

So when I was asked to write the story as a script, I cringed. It was full of those stupid three common to oral literature (three visits, three tree groves). There was no explanation of how the underworld ballroom, boats, trees and princes came into existence. There's no villain. The girls give up their exciting adventures without a whimper, and the chosen one

I knew I had to dismember and rebuild the story full of danger, quirky characters, irony and absurdity. Every play I've written went through an excruciating time when failure leered, until the characters took charge. And the same with this one.

This is a talented cast of 33, so I cannot mention them all. Sam Smiley, playing Cobb, was last seen as Oliver at Fort Wayne Youtheatre. Exceptional dancers Valleri Bowman, Sayda and Avey

Life Is Just a Bowl of Memes

A Survival Guide for Life by Bear Grylls,
HarperCollins, 2013

Bear Grylls has no problem getting a certain kind of respect. As the star of the Discovery TV show Man vs Wild, he became a mainstream survival guru; if you needed to know how to eat a live scorpion, Grylls was your go-to guy. However, when it was revealed that some of the scenarios on his show were staged, Grylls' survival credibility took a hit, and a lot of people began to question just how reliable a guru he really was. His new book, A Survival Guide for Life, despite its title, aims to avoid the controversy by mostly side-stepping the survival angle. It positions Grylls not as an unstoppable outdoorsman, but instead as a dispenser of wisdom that can be used even outside the wild. This book is a manual for getting past the obstacles of everyday life rather than a guide to eating live animals.

The book consists of 75 short chapterettes, most of them between one and two pages long. If that seems like a lot of reading to be doing in one bite, don't worry; the chapters are made up of short, disconnected sentences with wide spacing between them, and many of them are in giant, bold type. And even though some of the chapters approach a full two pages in physical length, you only have to get through about a half-page of actual words. You could easily read three or four chapters

The great thing is, you don't even necessarily have to read the chapters, because the titles do a fantastic job of conveying each chapter's theme. "Have a dream." "Never give up." "Know yourself." "Don't assume." "Be kind." "Use time wisely." "Don't dwell on mistakes." The rest of the text in each chapter, while certainly enlightening, really only serves to restate the masterfully crafted titles, so you wouldn't have to, strictly speaking, read the whole chapter to get the idea. Here, for example, is a sentence from "Be kind": "What you really want from the people you are with is that they are kind — to know that they are on your side when the chips are down." That one is in bold type, so you can find it by skimming, but you don't even have to go that far; the title said it in only two words, and you already read the title. Consider yourself a bit wiser, and move on.

There are 75 chapters, but there are only a hand-

Oprah Flick Tops Weak Box Office

Tops at the Box: Last weekend was by far the slowest weekend at the movies in months, the Top 12 films grossing only a combined $91 million, about half the summer weekend average. School's in, kidos. Now is the time of year when we wait. We wait for the late fall/early winter season when all the best movies finally come out. Last week's No. 1 flick was once again Oprah's The Butler, selling another $17 million and upping the movie's 10-day total to just over $52 million in the U.S. Look for this flick to keep on raking in the dough while also registering on the Oscar season radar.

Also at the Box: Rawson Marshall Thurber's lousy We're the Millers took the No. 2 spot last weekend, selling another $13.5 million, upping the film's 17-day total to $92 million in the U.S. and $115 million worldwide. Gotta say, I didn't see that coming. For some reason I saw this film, and through the whole thing I was wishing Vince Vaughn and Kristen Wiig had the Jason Sudeikis and Jennifer Aniston roles. Taking the No. 3 spot at the box was The Mortal Instruments: City of Bones, a silly movie that sold $9.3 million over the weekend. Edgar Wright's incredible The World's End under-performed during its first week, taking the No. 4 spot with just $9 million in sales over its first three days. Boo. The movie sold $16 million overseas, so it's already made back more than its $20 million budget, but, dang. I was hoping this one would go big. I suppose the Wright/Pegg/Frost Team (Shaun of the Dead, Hot Fuzz) will have to settle for yet another cult classic. Disney's latest animated flick, Planes, rounded out last weekend's Top 5 with $8.5 million in sales. Woody Allen's Blue Jasmine finally opened wide, selling $4.3 million while playing on 1,283 screens. The film has made about $15 million in the U.S. despite very little distribution or promotion. Look for it to make a lot of money once released in foreign markets, as all Woody flicks do.

New this Week: A film called One Direction: This Is Us, will open wide this weekend. It's a documentary about that silly pop band and is directed by Super-Size Me director Morgan Spurlock and produced by Simon Cowell. Sounds like Spurlock has been in it for the money all along. A mediocre-looking action thriller called Getaway — starring Ethan Hawke, Selena Gomez and Jon Voight — also opens this weekend. How Hawke is once one again a bankable leading man in widely distributed films is beyond me. I like the guy a whole lot, so good for him. Lastly, we have the weekend's most interesting — and promising — new release, an artsy, well-made thriller from John Crowley called Closed Circuit. The end of summer is sort of a second dumping season for studios, so there's a chance that this flick has been sitting on the Focus Features shelf for a while, just looking for a weekend that offers little competition. But there's also a chance that Closed Circuit, which is getting compared to some really great films, will be quite good. The film stars Eric Bana, Rebecca Hall, ScreenTime favorite Jim Broadbent and Julia Stiles and is supported by a strong trailer. Wong Kar-Wai's The Grandmaster will see an expanded release while indies Instructions Not Included and The Lifeguard will both see small releases. Might be a good weekend to stay home and rent something via VOD. Might I suggest Joe Swanberg's Drinking Buddies, David M. Rosenthal's A Single Shot and Hannah Fidell's A Teacher? All great films.

Bower, Chloe Cameron, Anna Boeglin, Kathyrynne and Hannah Schauer, Carolann Byers and Anthony Hayes showed the way, and now all smoothly trace the floor in the four musical numbers. I saw stubborn, uncomfortable boys whom I had to take by hand, pull into position and command to take their girl’s hands learn the steps and become grinning athletes on the dance floor. Brandon Johnson, Lion in my Wizard of Oz show, is hilarious as the stammering, groggy prince appointed to watch the princesses. The villainous Grand Vizier is creepily played by Kael Bronson who played Peter in The Lion, the Witch and the Wardrobe.

Live theater is liberating. By playing other characters, actors are forced to think as they do and consider their history and why they are how they are. Getting through it breaks that neurosis that so illogically infects most of humanity: the fear of public speaking! Fear of snakes, heights, small spaces, spiders yes. They’ll kill you. But speaking up to explain yourself when accused, to argue for justice, to rally for a cause or just to apologize, or tell someone their zipper is down – we need more of that. Being able to speak up is like a superpower.

So take your family to live theater. It cannot survive on just actors’ families buying tickets. And it shouldn’t need grants if all seats are sold. Live theater invigorates watchers and performers.

Grand Effect Auditions & Premiere

Grand Effect Productions will hold open auditions for Paul Allen’s stage adaptation of Edgar Lee Masters’ Spoon River Anthology. The play, set in small Illinois town’s cemetery late on a Halloween night, is a collection of monologues presented by the town residents, all of whom have left their graves to tell the haunting tales of this small community. Auditions will be held 2-5 p.m. on Sunday, September 15 at Calhoun Street Soups, Salads & Spirits, 1915 S. Calhoun St.

The show calls for seven adult men, four adult women and one male youth (age 8 to 14). There are singing and non-singing roles available. Everyone in the show will sing old familiar songs as a group with opportunities for soloists. People of all races are encouraged to attend. No experience is necessary. Those auditioning do not need to prepare anything. The rehearsal schedule will be set based on cast members’ availability. Production dates are set for October 21-23. Cast members will receive monetary compensation provided they meet certain requirements.

Grand Effect Productions also presents the world premiere of Fancy, Mr. Farmer’s Daughter, a family-friendly musical, in CS3’s Tiger Room September 9-11. In the story the beautiful Miss Fancy Farmer has returned to her mountain home after getting her “education” in the city. Her childhood boyfriend, Corbett, wants to marry Fancy, but Fancy can’t say “I do.” The cast includes Kristen Merriam, Lauren Amos, Bethanie Hirschelman, Neicei Perry, Angela Holliman, Jason Mutzfeld, Robert Emmett, Daniel Lodbell and Paul Allen.

ON BOOKS - From Page 26

ful of wisdom-bits that Grylls presents over and over. Have goals. Work toward the goals without quitting. Don’t worry. Money isn’t everything. Come to think of it, if you read those four sentences, you might not have to read the book at all. But you might still want to, because if you like those four sentences, you’ll find quite a few different versions of them throughout the book.

You’ll also enjoy the book if you’re one of those people who posts those adorable, inspirational text-graphics (hipsters call them “memes” to differentiate them from the inspirational posters that people used to hang on their walls) on your Facebook page. Grylls is a meme-generating maniac in this book: “Paddle your own canoe”; “No one cares how much you know until they know how much you care”; “When you’re going through hell, keep going”; “When life hands you a lemon, make lemonade” (That’s the title of chapter 73. It really is.). If Winston Churchill is reported to have said it, it’s here (although there are paraphrases here of Mark Twain, Yoda and Mike Tyson, too, for variety’s sake).

A good quiz to see whether or not this book is for you involves a bit of poetry interpretation. You know the Robert Frost poem “The Road Not Taken”? It’s the one about a guy who comes to a fork in the road and has to decide which path to choose. Is the poem a metaphor for the value of individuality and innovation (i.e., choosing the “less traveled” path)? If your answer is yes, then Grylls is your man. If your answer is no, you’re either not sufficiently into English literature, or you’re thinking way too much for Grylls.
