If you're looking for something to do in the Fort Wayne area this week or next, you've come to the right place. We're in our 18th year of telling Fort Wayne area residents where to go – or whatzup, to put it more mildly. Regular readers already know that this is where to go if you want to find everything there is to do – music, theatre, art, what have you – all in one place. If you're new to whatzup, we invite you to spend some time reading this publication's features, calendars, columns and ads. We're pretty sure you're going to find something you don't want to miss.

A print product such as this has one serious limitation: space. So if you're looking for something to do in, say, a month or two from now, check out our website at www.whatzup.com. If we have it in our system (and we work hard at making sure we do), you're going to find it there. And whether at your computer or on your smartphone, you're going to find our website more comprehensive and easily navigated than any other art and entertainment or news site. Anywhere. If you come across something you think we can do better, tell us. We're happy to hear any ideas that make whatzup and whatzup.com more useful to our readers.

But we're keeping you from more important things, like what's inside this week's issue. Our cover story this week features the folk/Americana septet Old Crow Medicine Show, part of a powerhouse Foellinger Theatre season. Mark Hunter writes about them on page 4. Also, on page 6, Michele DeVinney features playwright Kris Bauske whose Whispers to the Moon won this year's Northeast Indiana Playwright Festival's top prize.

That, of course, is just the start, but this being print, we're out of space. So read on, find something fun for you and your family to do and then go have it – fun that is. While you're having it, just remember to tell 'em who sent you.

High Times for Beard Music

----- Feature • Old Crow Medicine Show -----

By Mark Hunter

It's been quite a year for Old Crow Medicine Show. The Nashville-based string band became a member of the Grand Ole Opry in September, saw its song "Wagon Wheel" earn a Platinum certification for more than 1,000,000 copies sold and won a Grammy for Best Long Form Video for the film Big Easy Express. In July the seven-piece band will release Remedy, its fifth CD and, according to founding member Chris "Critter" Fuqua, its most grown up.

Old Crow Medicine Show will be on the road this spring and summer to support Remedy, a tour that has them bringing souped-up Americana to the Foellinger Theater in Fort Wayne on Thursday, May 29.

Remedy is the first record Fugua has played on since 2008's Tennessee Pusher. He left the band in 2007 after a European tour to enter rehab for alcohol dependence and then attend (Fuqua college. earned a degree in Old English and Old Norse languages.) Those experiences and the fact that the band members are no longer kids give the new record a different feel, Fuqua said. "I think Remedy is a really mature album," Fuqua said in a phone interview. "We've got some great songs. The writing is more grown up. But there's definitely some stuff that could of come off some earlier album of ours. When you've been doing this as long as we have, you can't help but grow."

American folk music has been going through yet another resurgence of popularity in the last 20 or so years. The Coen brothers film Oh Brother, Where Art Thou?, released in late 2000, brought folk and string music to a wide and eager audience in much the same way artists like the Kingston Trio, the Weavers and Bob Dylan did 40 years earlier, and the way Woody Guthrie did in the 1930s and 40s. Fuqua and Old Crow bandmate Ketch Secor caught this latest folk wave well before Oh Brother splashed across the nation's screens. For Fuqua, the current ubiquity of folkies is a good and natural phenomena.

"I think it's cyclical," he said. "It's just come around again. I'm so glad to be a part of it. I have never seen so many string bands and beards. It's great."

Fuqua sees the trend as a result of technology speeding things up to the point where there is a longing for a return to roots.

"With this thing called progress, we lose sight of who we are. Music is a good way to reclaim that sense of who we are and where we come from.'

Old Crow Medicine Show are probably best known for their song "Wagon Wheel," which was on their first record, 2004's O.C.M.S. With its mid-tempo ramble, catchy chorus and heartfelt lyrics, "Wagon Wheel" stirred widespread interest in the band. Darius Rucker's cover of the song is his most popular release to date.

But by the time O.C.M.S. came out, the septet had already spent five years busking and recording. Fuqua and Secor started playing together even earlier. The pair met in Harrisonburg, Virginia in the seventh grade. Like most suburban kids that age, they were

After high school Secor attended Ithaca College in New York. Fuquu went with him. Ithaca at the time was a hotbed of pickers playing old-timey tunes, jug-band numbers. Southern folk and bluegrass. They started traveling around the northeast, picking up more players along the way and making cassette recordings to sell on the road. They busked their way across Canada and much of the U.S., eventually landing in 1999 in a farmhouse in Boone, North Carolina. Boone happens to be where the late great Doc Watson (Watson died May 29, 2012) got his start playing on the street in front of Boone Drug. One day Watson heard OCMS playing in front of that same drug store, liked what he heard and invited the band to play later that year at MerleFest, Watson's wildly popular acoustic music festival. The Merlefest crowd gave OCMS a standing ovation after their one-song set.

Following the MerleFest ap-pearance, Old Crow Medicine Show took off. Multiple appearances on A Prairie Home Companion (Garrison Keillor calls them "one of the greatest bands that A Prairie Home Companion has ever had the pleasure to host.") They have had talents such as David Rawlings, (O.C.M.S., Big Iron World), Don Was (Tennessee Pusher) and Ted Hutt (Carry Me Back, Remedy) produce their records. They've played all the big festivals including Bonnaroo, Coachella and the Newport Folk Festival, and toured Europe. In 2011 the band joined Mumford and Sons and Edward Sharpe and the Magnetic Zeros for a cross-country trip from California to New Orleans aboard a vintage train. The journey was captured in the documentary Big Easy Express.

Through it all, including the departure and return of members, a several-year hiatus and side projects, Old Crow Medicine Show have retained their enthusiasm and love of the music. A little help from their friends hasn't hurt, either.

"The way we can tour now allows us to focus our energy on the show," Fuqua said. "When you're 20 you have that energy naturally. With some success you can have a tour bus and hotels and a crew to take care of a lot of stuff so that as we get older we can have that exuberance when we hit the stage. When people come to see us, I guarantee that they'll have a good time. If you want to have fun come out to our show. Doesn't matter who you are. That's Critter's guarantee."

initially drawn to rock.

"I was 12 or 13 starting when I started playing guitar and electric guitar," Fuqua said in a phone interview. "I was playing Guns N' Roses and AC/DC. I was into heavy metal and rock. Jimi Hendrix.'

Around that same time, he took a trip to London with his family where he found a Dylan bootleg with an outtake called "Rock Me Mama." The outtake was from the studio sessions for the soundtrack to the movie Pat Garrett and Billy the Kid in which Dylan starred. Fuqua brought the recording home and gave it to Secor. At that point everything started to change musically for both.

"I started listening to Bob Dylan a lot," Fuqua said. "I started playing different. It was a conscious decision. I didn't grow up in a holler."

Secor became obsessed with Dylan as well. He says that while attending high school in New Hampshire, he spent four years listening to "nothing but Bob" and going to every show he could. The Dylan outtake stayed with him, and eventually he fleshed-out the "rock me mama" line into a full tune he called "Wagon Wheel." After playing it on the road for nearly 10 years, Secor finally applied for the rights and wound up sharing writing credit for the song with Dylan. (Remedy has a Dylan/Old Crow tune

By Michele DeVinney

The Fort Wayne Civic Theatre has long been a popular and respected venue for great community theatre in the area, and each year their season - filled with both musical and straight plays by some of the most revered playwrights in the world – draws thousands to their homes in the Arts United Center and at the Allen County Public Library, which hosts their Off-Main offerings in a more intimate setting. But for the last five years, the Civic has also hosted a unique opportunity to discover new playwrights, ones who are just beginning to establish themselves.

This year's 5th Annual Northeast Indiana Playwright Festival once again awards up and coming playwrights monetary prizes. More importantly, stages the play of the winner while providing readings of the two runners-up. Joining the festivities this year will be Pulitzer Prize-winning playwright Donald Margulies who will serve as the festival's guest speaker as well as acting as moderator for the discussions following the readings.

The other top name visiting the festival will be Kris Bauske who submitted this year's winning play, Whispers to the Moon. A native of Grand Rapids, Michigan, Bauske is a graduate of the University of Michigan but now

"My parents divorced when I was 11, and my father moved to Indiana," she says. "I also have a cousin who taught in Fort Wayne along with my family still in Michigan, so I still have a lot of connections and affection for Indiana and that area.'

Her love of theatre began when she was asked by her marching band director to join the pit orchestra for her high school's musical production. It was there she first caught the bug, and she continued to be active in theatre throughout high school and college, getting involved with summer stock production along the way. That may have been the end of it, as a job, kids and her move to Florida took her life in another direction. But her of her passion for the stage.

"My husband and I were going to watch some television, and I saw that there was a show with those redneck guys and thought, because of the time of year, that it was probably going to be a Christmas show of some kind. Well, it turned out it wasn't, and I was disappointed because I thought they had missed a good opportunity because a redneck Christmas special would probably be really good. Then I was at church, and concept for a play using famed playwright Neil Simon as a character came to mind, she reached out to his people to get permission to use his name. Simon first wanted to read

'His agent told me that he laughed out loud when he read it which is a really nice compliment!" says Bauske. "But then his agent offered to represent me, which was unbelievable. A playwright is less likely to work with an agent than they are to get struck by lightning, pretty much."

Bauske continues to hone her preferring to write when really moved to do so rather than on a daily basis.

"I'm just not one of those people who says 'I'm going to write four hours everyday.' I have to feel an urgent desire for it. and then I become obsessed. I know other people don't but I find for me that it helps to capture the energy I feel and then translates that for the audience. If it's easy for me to write and I feel really excited about it, then I think it'll be easy for an audience to watch too."

wright Donald Margulies

Bauske has a diverse catalog of success already, having even tapped into her talented family to write a musical version of A Good Old-Fashioned, Redneck Country Christmas. She's been busy submitting plays to various festivals around the country, including a prestigious one in Ashland, Oregon. Her prize-winning play in Fort Wayne was a finalist in Ashland, but Bauske would have been required to halt any other production of

And somehow the redneck Christmas idea and that sermon got all wrapped up together and came to me in a dream, and I woke up with a tangible idea for a play and decided to write it."

The result, A Good Old-Fashioned Redneck Country Christmas, was not only eventually staged, but was published and produced around the world, giving Bauske her first taste of success as a playwright. Her good fortune didn't stop there. When a later

Wasted Years

Keith Morris is still angry. At least he can still sound angry. I mean, what do you expect from the guy that's pretty much the elder statesman of classic California punk?

If you've been following Morris and his semi punk superstar group, you know what the score is. OFF! play old school punk with no frills.

Just amps cranked to full capacity, breakneck drums (by the always amazing Mario Rubalcaba) and Morris' always penetrating vocals. The band's self-titled debut from 2012 was a road map to middleaged angst and demon exorcising if I've ever heard one. On Wasted Years the sound hasn't changed a bit. The mission statement remains the same: Destroy!

There are so many variations of punk rock anymore that I start to get tired and want to nap just thinking about it. For me, the early 80s were the prime moment for punk. Southern California gave birth to Black Flag, Dead Kennedys, Circle Jerks, Suicidal Tendencies, Minutemen, The Germs and Angry Samoans. As soon as bands started to try to make punk pretty and poppy, I get all curmudgeonly and want to excuse myself from the table.

OFF! remind me why punk mattered at one point. Morris sounds like a man with a purpose behind the mic. I hear a song like "I Won't Be a Casualty" and it makes me feel like a 13-year-old listening to Circle Jerks while riding around in my older brother's tiny Nissan pickup. "I won't be a casualty! / I won't be a casualty!" Neither will I Keith. Neither will I.

"Void You Out" is a punishing blast of power chords and Morris screaming "Blue versus grey / red and the blue / Barbed wire fence / Guns pointed at you." Could be a description of some Ukrainian struggle or an Occupy Wall Street protest gone bad. The line is blurred too much to know for sure.

"Red White and Black," "Legion of Evil," "No Easy Escape" and especially the extra snarly "Death Trip On The Party Train" are all friendly reminders that there are still some guys keeping the punk dream alive and well and are willing to bloody a face or two to get their point across.

We need more guys like Morris, Dimitri Coats, Steven Shane McDonald, and Mario Rubalcaba blowing our eardrums and reminding us all's not well in the world. (John Hubner)

Wye Oak ^{Shriek}

So what do I know about Wye Oak? Well, I know Jenn Wasner has one of those voices you want to hear sing just about anything. It's a dark and breathy kind of voice. It's the kind of voice you want to crawl into and take a nap in. There's an all-knowing maturity in her pipes, but also an underlying sweetness.

She's also quite a capable guitarist, as she's proven that over the course of three albums since 2007. It's not that sweet, folksy plucking that girls are supposed to play. Well, sometimes it is. Sometimes it's quite lovely. But she can also get messy and noisy, creating squall and grit like the best of 'em.

I also know that Andy Stack lays down the drumbeats, plays keys and probably noodles with knobs and faders in the studio. Over the course of seven years, Wasner and Stack have put out three solid records filled with guitar-based indie tunes that have gotten progressively better with each album. They peaked with 2011's Civilian, an album filled with catchy songs and tight songcraft that got the Baltimore duo more exposure than they'd ever seen.

It's now 2014, and Wye Oak have given us a follow-up in the album Shriek. What do you do after you release an album like Civilian? You tear down your kingdom and rebuild it from the ground

Now don't be worried. That great songcraft is still here in all its glory. The Wasner/Stack magic is still front and center. They've just

BACKTRACKS

Pretenders Pretenders II (1981)

Akron-born Chrissie Hynde has an extensive background in rock n' roll. Her friendship with members of The Sex Pistols, The Damned and The Clash gave her enough credibility to start her own band, the Pretenders, in 1978. After their first record (and the huge hit "Brass in Pocket"), they went back into the Pocket"), they went back into the studio and created this outstanding follow-up.

Opening with "The Adultress," a seductive track about being a mistress, the album takes you right into "Bad Boys Get Spanked." It was punk rock from a female perspective, and although it came towards the end of the genre, it worked very well on college radio in the United States.

Their hit single, "Message of Love," was also a recognized on both sides of the Atlantic and is still considered one of their better tracks. "I Go to Sleep" was one of the band's softer ballads and was written originally by Ray Davies for The Kinks (Hynde had a daughter with Davies). "Birds of Paradise" is another beautiful ballad and shows a softer side to the band. The Pretenders were one of the few bands during this period that could pull off this kind of range and was one of the reasons I listened to them.

Another familiar track, "Talk of The Town," is classic Pretenders. Hynde's vocals in front of tight guitars gave it an almost jazzy arrangement, and it's still my favorite Pretenders song.

The rest of the album is a warm balance between adult-alternative rock and the sultry, sensuality from Hynde. It still sounds as good today as it did back in high school.

Sadly, original guitarist James Honeyman-Scott (who was 25) died after the release of this record, and original bassist Peter Farndon also overdosed at age 30 in 1983.

Fun Fact: Hynde attended Kent State University in the early 1970s. One of her first bands was with another student, Mark Mothersbaugh, a founding member of Devo. (Dennis Donahue) traded in the guitar-based songs for a decidedly more 80s sound. Keyboards have stepped up to the plate this time around, and Wasner's voice is even more the centerpiece than it was before.

"Before" is a dreamy track that could've been a hit for the Eurythmics back in 1983. Wasner has that auburn-haired, sultry Annie Lennox quality here that I think has always been there; it just wasn't this apparent. "Shriek" is carried along with a loping piano line as noises tickle your ears. Andy Stack does a great job of creating mood and emotion with the keys and programming, allowing Wasner to get lost in the feel of the song. "The Tower" and "Sick Talk" benefit greatly from the band's newfound love for synths and bass-driven beats.

If you're already a fan and follow Wasner's other musical endeavors, then you are familiar with Dungeonesse, her synth pop side project with Jon Ehrens. That band's very pop feel plays an important role in the direction that Wye Oak have taken this time around. While not completely going pop, they've added a decidedly more synthetic aesthetic to the organic, earthy sound of past albums. The results I think have revitalized them as a band. As good as If Children, The Knot and Civilian were, I think Wye Oak were in danger of being swallowed up (unfairly, I might add) by the boy/girl tsunami that hit our musical shores a few years ago. This shift in sound and instrumentation has set them even further apart from their contemporaries. Songs like "Despicable Animal," "Paradise" and album closer "Logic Of Color" deserve to be heard and admired on their own merit.

Shriek is a change for the better – a re-establishing of an already proven great band, now spreading their wings. Wasner and Stack delivered a great follow-up to Civilian and what sounds like a new phase in their musical history. It's also a great album to play really loud in the car, at home and in your headphones. Shriek is the first great summer record of the year. (John Hubner)

TRF Has a Deal for Live Music Fans

With the Three Rivers Festival concert lineup set, there's an opportunity for you to take part in a special ticket offer to enjoy them all. For only $45 you can purchase the Mega Music Pass that will get you into every concert throughout the week-long festival.

For one low-dough price you can take in Cheap Trick (July 11), the Under the Sun Tour featuring Blues Traveler, Sugar Ray, Smash Mouth and Uncle Kracker (July 1212), For King & Country (July 13), the Waiter-Waitress Contest with music from The Rescue Plan (July 14), Brother (July 15), Family Fun Day featuring The Tim Harrington Band, The Jug Huffers and The Atomic Sharks (July 16), American Young (July 17), Who's Bad: The Ultimate Michael Jackson Tribute Band (July 18) and the Fireworks Night with music from Urban Legend and Seattle Rain (July 19). That's a heck of a deal, especially when you consider Cheap Trick and Under the Sun are $20 alone. The pass can be purchased at the TRF office at 102 3 Rivers N., Fort Wayne, or through the TRF website, www.threeriversfestival.org, where you can also find the complete list of concerts and opening bands.

The Cinema Center and Embassy Theatre are joining forces for Dudefest on Friday, May 30. What the heck is Dudefest? The event gets its name from Jeff Bridges' "The Dude" character from the 1998 flick The Big Lebowski. The film, which also features John Goodman, Julianne Moore, Steve Buscemi and John Turturro, has become a cult classic and has generated annual festivals in several different cities. Entertainment Weekly has ranked it eighth on their "Funniest Movies of the Past 25 Years" list and 34th on their list of "The Top 50 Cult Films." Dudefest begins at 5 p.m., with the film being shown on the Embassy screen beginning at 7:30 p.m. The event will also feature Bravas food truck serving up some grub; Embassy bartenders will be serving up White Russians, The Dude's drink of choice. Attendees are encouraged to dress up as one of the characters, as there will be a costume contest along with a trivia contest and a chance to win an official Big Lebowski rug. Additionally, Crazy Pinz will set up a bowling alley inside the Embassy and give away a Suite Party Package valued at $500. Tickets for the event are $10 in advance and $12 day of and are available at the Embassy box office, Ticketmaster and by calling 800-745-3000.

Canal Days will invade downtown New Haven on June 3 for a week of midway rides, vendors, fair food and plenty of entertainment acts. One noteworthy act will be Grammy- and GMA Dove Award-nominated Christian rockers, Rhett Walker Band on Saturday, June 7 at 7 p.m. Hailing from Nashville, Tennessee, these cats have earned quite a fanbase since their 2012 debut, Come to the River, which gained award nominations and lots of radio play on Christian music radio. This free show is the second annual Faith & Family Night which aims to bring together all generations and all denominations to celebrate the community of New Haven. The band Carrollton, from Cincinnational open the show.

Riot Fest in Chicago is celebrating its 10th anniversary with a three-day festival in Humboldt Park. The Cure and Jane's Addiction headline the biggest Riot Fest yet, with The National, Weezer, The Flaming Lips, Slaver, Wu-Tang Clan, Social Distortion and about 50 other groups also scheduled to perform. The event takes place September12-14 and will help bring a proper close to summer and the short period of good weather this area of the country enjoys each year.

Last month, bars and clubs that offer live music in Minneapolis, Minnesota became legally required to offer free earplugs to patrons due to a new city ordinance. The earplugs will be provided to the bars and clubs at no cost from a private group, so everyone wins, right? Brian Felson, a spokesman for the group providing the earplugs told a Minneapolis newspaper that his group's goal is to make hearing protection as accessible as possible for everyone. "It's much easier for people to introduce it to their own lives if it's something that they don't have to pay for. It shouldn't come down to, 'Oh, I don't want to pay a dollar for the earplugs' when that dollar is an investment not only in their ability to hear but their hearing health and their well-being." Unbelievably, some bar and club owners opposed the city ordinance, even though it won't cost them a dime, because they made a lot of money selling earplugs to their patrons in the past.

As someone who suffers hearing loss from going to too many live shows over his life, I applaud the Minneapolis council for mandating the free earplugs. I'm not opposed to loud music, nor am I a stranger to it, but sometimes "really loud" can cross the line into "too loud," and some relief, provided by earplugs, is needed from time to time. These days I rarely go to a show without at least two pairs of earplugs in my pocket just in case I somehow lose a pair. My older, somewhat wiser self wishes my younger self would have realized several years ago that he could enjoy the shows just as much wearing earplugs, thus avoiding damaging his hearing beyond repair. The availability of free earplugs at shows may have just been the catalyst to help that guy figure things out more rapidly. Hey, young Chris, wearing earplugs doesn't make you less of a rocker and doesn't make the experience any less enjoyable. It's just smart. Maybe someday I'll have enough money to buy a DeLorean and pull a "Michael J. Fox," going back in time to give young Chris some advice. I might just punch him in the face just to make my point loud and clear.

her play until the Ashland finals in September, so she declined. But she's enthusiastic about sharing Whispers to the Moon to Fort Wayne audiences in the coming weeks

The play, which explores the poignant story of a woman who carries on a 40-year relationship with a man who is not her husband, taps into some very emotional subjects, and Bauske is excited by the calls she's getting from Civic Executive Director Phillip Colglazier about the progress of rehearsals.

'Phillip has sent me pictures of the set design, and one day he called to ask me about a fabric he had chosen for one of the dresses. I was so excited because I realized that this man has such a grasp for what I had envisioned for those characters. Seeing this play produced is going to be like seeing your child walk for the first time. I'm going to think 'Did I really do this?' And when I hear about the actors that have been cast - words just can't express how I feel about all of this."

Bauske is happy for the validation (she says she cried when Colglazier called to tell her she had won), but she is also happy to forge a path for women playwrights in general. She hopes her victory will be part of an even larger movement for women as playwrights

"Success is just so hard to come by for women. I belong to the Dramatist's Guild of America, and the way you become an associate member is by having [a play] staged. Then you become a full member when your play is published or produced. Women are just 26 percent of all associate members, and when you look at full members, it's just 14 percent who are women. When you hear the numbers of women versus men as playwrights, it's just awful. It's nice to share any victory with other women in theatre because I see it as a 'win for us.""

Million Dollar Arm Touches All the Movie Bases

Million Dollar Arm plays like a paint by number project. It isn't trying to reproduce a particular masterpiece, but the intention is to create a work that is familiar and pleasing. The canvas is filled with likeable elements, and there aren't any gaping blank spots. The execution isn't sloppy, but as you watch it you are aware you are not looking at an original work of art that will someday hang in a museum. Instead, Million Dollar Arm is something nice that could hang above the couch in the family room.

Million Dollar Arm isn't really a "sports movie." There is baseball in Million Dollar Arm, but not a lot of it. We all know, courtesy of Tom Hanks and the ladies of A League of Their Own, "there's no crying in baseball" and since Million Dollar Arm is begging you to cry, playing on your heart strings in several scenes, it can't be a "baseball movie."

Here are a few of the colors and shapes painted into Million Dollar Arm. The movie is based on a true story. The two main characters of the film are young men who come from India and became professional baseball players. You see the real players in the closing credits. (Including the real folks is a brush stroke I love.)

Another reliable part of the palate is that the fish are out of water. First, the ugly American doesn't know what to make of India, a world where nothing works as expected (when it works at all). Thanks to the presence of Jon Hamm as the clueless American, Million Dollar Arm will bring in the ladies as well as sports fans. This is a nice date night movie for parents, and the kids can come too. The PG rating is for some suggestive romantic situations and a little sharp language. The messages of inspiration - including hard work, loyalty, persistence, dedication and imagination - make a fine example for younger audiences.

I look forward to being a big fan of Jon Hamm. I tried a few times to watch Mad Men and just couldn't. A show about the advertising industry, deception, sexism, smoking and Scotch - all things that if avoided make it easier to live a happy life - made me nauseous so quickly that I couldn't stick with it for more than a few minutes. I admire Hamm for taking his Mad Men cred and setting a very different course. Before he becomes a great villain, ace detective or action superstar, it is nice to see him in a role where he gets to go from jerk to sweetie. In this inning of his career, like any good Grinch, his heart grows three sizes. Hamm plays J.B. Bernstein, a sports agent (also pictured in the closing credits).

Later, the Indian folk are the fish out of water when they come to America, but like hard working, ambitious immigrants, they learn to swim very quickly. Already in this country is J.B.'s partner, Aash (Assif Mandvi), a good and loyal friend as well as partner. Suraj Sharma and Madhur Mittal play Rinku and Dinesh, the two young men recruited to become baseball stars. They both give charming performances.

Pitobash (yep, one name) is also wonderful as Amit, who helps J.B. navigate India and comes to the states in the hopes of becoming a manager. Darshan Jariwala is also perfectly droll as Vivek, J.B.'s navigator through the culture of India. He stays in India but keeps cheering for the project.

Million Dollar Arm spends enough time in India that "exotic location" is another check off the list of how to make an appealing movie. Atmosphere is helpful, whether it is gorgeous rolling farmland, a hot mix of urban life or the Taj Mahal.

Next on the list of charms is that a nonblond gets noticed. Lake Bell is perfect as Brenda, the medical student renting the cottage on J.B.'s place. Used to dating models, J.B. takes no notice of the lovely, smart, capable, caring woman living next door. When J.B. goes to India, she becomes caretaker of the property. When he returns with the boys, she becomes caretaker of all of them. Spoiler alert! These two end up happily married with a family in real life.

Perhaps my favorite stock player in Million Dollar Arm is the crusty old guy with heart and wisdom under the crust. Hey, if you can get Alan Arkin on board, that base is covered. Arkin plays the scout who doesn't need equipment to know how fast a pitch is crossing the plate. Bill Paxton is excellent as the doubting coach with an open mind.

Who can resist a film where inspiration comes from channel surfing? When J.B. is about to lose his sports agent business, he is cruising around the television landscape. On one channel is a cricket match, a sport he has dissed and dissed again. On another is Susan Boyle dumbfounding expectations with her "I Dreamed a Dream" performance. (I would love so much if this were part of the "true story.") A light goes on for J.B.

So J.B. begins his journey from jerk sports agent to human being by thinking "outside the box" and heading to India to recruit a cricket bowler who can bring his fastball into Major League Baseball. He gets financial backing for a contest to travel India and bring back some likely prospects to win a professional contract.

It is easy to imagine that the pitch meeting for this project was Jerry Maguire meets Moneyball meets Slumdog Millionaire. You could be mean about that. Or if you liked any of those movies, you could just see for yourself. Back in the day, studios turned out formula pictures by the dozens. Some of them were forgettable. Some made secretive sidesteps to be special. If studios could reliably churn out films like Million Dollar Arm, we'd all go to the movies more often. Especially if ticket and popcorn prices would ease up a bit.

Godzilla's a Monster

Tops at the Box: Gareth Edwards' Godzilla opened big last weekend, selling $93 million in the U.S. over its first three days of

Also at the Box: Speaking of the summer movie season, Seth Rogen-fronted comedy Neighbors took the No. 2 spot at last weekend's box office, selling another $26 million in the U.S., bringing the flick's 10-day domestic total up to $91.5 million ($146 million worldwide). And poof!, look at that, Seth Rogen has pretty much become the biggest name in mainstream comedy. Who'd have thunk it? Here's to hoping he tosses a 50/50 into the mix every once and a while.

Taking the No. 3 spot at last weekend's box office was another early summer season hit, Marc Webb's The Amazing Spider-Man 2, starring Andrew Garfield and Emma Stone. The film sold another $17 million in the U.S., bringing its 17-day domestic total to $172 million and its worldwide sales total to a whopping $633 million. That's a lot of dollar bills. What's most interesting about that number is that the movie despite the dollars - feels like a flop. Sure, tickets are selling and people are seeing the movie, but no one seems to care about it or talk about it. It's just something that happened. So what. Maybe I'm wrong. Maybe in other parts of the country people are going batty for Spidey. Not here in New York, though.

Taking the No. 4 spot at last weekend's box office was Disney sports flick Million Dollar Arm, a baseball film starring Jon Hamm, Bill Paxton and Lake Bell. The film opened soft, selling just $10 million over its first three days of release. So we know that people don't much care about baseball anymore (present company excluded), but what about Jon Hamm? Lake Bell? With a script by the great Tom McCarthy and a very smart plot, Million Dollar Arm is the rare Disney film I'm excited to see. Here's hoping it makes a little more bread over the next few weeks.

Rounding out last weekend's Top 5 was The Other Woman, a movie I feel I've already spent too much time typing about. Woman sold $6.3 million over the weekend, upping the chick flick's total to $71 million in the U.S. and $150 million worldwide. Oof.

New This Week: The latest Adam Sandler/Drew Barrymore rom-com, Blended, opens wide this weekend. I get excited every time Sandler has a new movie on the horizon. Excited to see if people are somehow still racing out to see his movies. They are, and I'm sure that Blended will make a nice chunk of change (while also receiving terrible reviews and being largely forgettable).

Also out everywhere is Bryan Singer's X-Men: Days of Future Past, starring Huge Jacked Man, James McAvoy, Michael Fassbender, Jennifer Lawrence, Nicholas Hoult, Patrick Stewart, Ian McKellen, Ellen Page, Anna Paquin, Halle Barry and Peter Dinklage. What a cast. Wow. With that cast – and Singer at the helm - we have to at least sort of assume that Future Past is a movie worth seeing.

Lastly, a very promising thriller called Cold in July, starring Michael C. Hall, Don Johnson and Sam Shepard, will open in a few theaters around the country. Looks good.

Home Video: New to DVD and Blu-ray this past Tuesday, May 20: 3 Days to Kill, About Last Night, Grand Piano, Monuments Men, Pompeii, Like Someone in Love and something called Vampire Academy. New to DVD and Blu-ray this coming Tuesday, May 27: Endless Love, the criterion Blu-ray edition of Wes Anderson's The Life Aquatic with Steve Zissou, Run and Jump, Journey to the West, Cheap Thrills, A Birder's Guide to Everything and ... well, how about if we end it on the Birder's thing? Hard to top
