A Dead Clown's Next Act

Feature • My Dead Clown

By Michele DeVinney

Each year eager theater fans in Fort Wayne wait to hear what plays and musicals they can expect to enjoy in the coming season. Many of the titles are likely to be familiar to even casual fans much less the seasoned theater veteran. But those seeing titles on the First Presbyterian Theater schedule may have come up short at one name. Um, what exactly is My Dead Clown?

The short answer is the brainchild of David Rousculp, the funeral director who wrote My Dead Clown. The longer answer is, well, longer. But first it's important to know how Rousculp came to invent the clown in the first place. Born in Lima, Ohio, Rousculp grew up in Tipp City, a small town just outside of Dayton. When the Tipp City Players, a community theater group, first began, Rousculp's entire family got into the act.

"I was about 13 and auditioned for the first play they did," says Rousculp. "The whole family did. My brothers, my sisters, my mom — we were all in that first summer show. I was doing about three shows a year from then on."

He put those efforts aside for a time until he was a father and had a young daughter who wanted to be cast in a production of Annie. He decided to audition, then ask if his daughter could get a part in the cast as well. The gambit worked, and suddenly Rousculp was back on the stage and getting encouragement to take some acting classes.

"I was in Cleveland at the time, and there was an active film community there. There was a guy who gave acting classes in an apartment above his karate shop. It was in a bad section of town. In fact, it was just a few blocks from that house where the kidnapped girls were kept all those years. But this guy who lived above the karate shop was a stunt guy and taught people how to fight on screen. He was also giving these acting classes and told us to write short scripts that could be done in one room, like his situation living above the shop. As a funeral director, I have lived in apartments over funeral homes three or four times, so I knew immediately that I wanted my script to be set in an apartment over a funeral home."

The first piece of the puzzle was in place, but Rousculp wasn't entirely sure where to take it from there. Until fate intervened, and a particularly high-strung gentleman sat down next to Rousculp one day and began talking a mile a minute. Rousculp finally asked him what he did for a living, and the response provided the next piece.

"He said, 'I'm a professional clown,' and I thought what is the last person you'd want with you in a funeral home? A clown. But why would he be in a funeral home? I know, he's dead."

That much explains the title My Dead Clown, but there's still far more to the stoagain. But he was unsure of how to proceed.

"I had written it about a dozen different ways, but it had always been a film script. I wasn't sure how to change it into a play which is a completely different ballgame. And it was short notice, but I got it together and won second place again."

His finish led to a stage reading with actors, something which rekindled his love for My Dead Clown and ultimately led to the casting of the lead role.

"The play was really well-received, and people thought it was really funny. I had thought I was done with it, but seeing what these actors did with the roles and hearing what they brought to the characters got me all wound up about it and anxious to do more with it."

Elise Ramel from the Civic and Thom Hofrichter from First Presbyterian both encouraged him to look for backing so that a play could be staged locally, a task which proved easier than it sounded. One more piece of the puzzle remained though.

"It's not a musical, but I had a place in the script that said 'Insert song here,' and then I realized 'I guess I'm going to have to write a song now.' But I had never done that before. I started coming up with lines and melodies and took my phone into the shower with me to record things as I came up with them."

Remarkably, a big show-stopper emerged from his efforts, one recorded at Sweetwater by local legend Kat Bowser and a horn section brought in from Nashville. Now ready for the First Pres stage, My Dead Clown will finally be in front of an audience which will hopefully allow for one more transition.

"Having turned it into a play from a film script, now I have to do the opposite. I have Hollywood producers interested in filming it, and I think it'll be shot in Fort Wayne, which will give the city a nice profile."

Rousculp has not only seen a character he developed more than a decade ago come to life on the stage, featuring Reuben Albaugh in the title role he first tackled in that reading last year, but he's happy with his new home in Fort Wayne.

"I was surprised when I moved here, but Fort Wayne is a great town. The sports are great, the arts are great and there are a lot of good restaurants. There's plenty to do. And I'm amazed at these people in community theater. The talent just blows my mind. The fact that they're giving up their time — their summer — because they want to be part of this, it's just incredible."

ry of how that scene, assigned by a karate guy who also taught acting, becomes a full-fledged stage production which visits First Presbyterian Theater beginning July 12.

"I knew My Dead Clown was a great attention grabber, so I started working on a script based on that. I had already bought the software Final Draft and learned how to use that, and wrote a script in 2005 which I submitted to a competition. It got second place, so I kept working on the film script and by 2008 I had enough interest in filming it that I thought it was going to happen. But then the economy tanked, and that didn't happen. At that point, I had had enough of that clown and put it on a shelf. I thought I was done with it."

But four years ago, Rousculp moved from Cleveland to Fort Wayne to accept the job as funeral director at Harper's in New Haven. In 2016 his wife mentioned that the Civic Theater was holding a playwriting contest and suggested he enter. Unsure what to write, she pointed out "You actually already have something. Use My Dead Clown. And use the funny one!"

By this time Rousculp had a variety of versions of My Dead Clown, ranging from dark to comedic, and decided to take a look

Starting next week this publication will have a new editor and new owner and the guy writing this "page 3 blurb" will be one huge step closer to riding off into the sunset that is retired life.

July 1, 2018, the date on which whatzup officially changes hands, will be just one month shy of the 22nd anniversary of our August 1, 1996 premiere issue. Both this publication and the Fort Wayne-area market have undergone a lot of changes over these past 22 years, but there's no question that it has been two decades of steady and amazing progress. It's just as certain that the future is bright for the region and just as bright for whatzup under its new ownership.

We'll let them tell you about the change and what it means over the coming months, but rest assured, the new owner can do things with this publication that we could only fantasize about.

The guy writing this blurb, however, couldn't have done what he's been able to do these past 22 years without a lot of help. This publication wouldn't exist without the extraordinary contributions of many people, some of whom have been with us from the very beginning. From past or present employees, freelance writers, route drivers to web geeks, the determination to make whatzup the best it can be despite our limited resources has been off the charts, and this writer will be forever grateful.

Of course, the lifeblood of a free-distribution publication like whatzup is its advertisers. They're partners, really, and there's no way we can adequately express our gratitude in this limited space.

To our loyal readers, rest assured that we're leaving you in very capable hands. Thanks for your support over the years and for remembering to tell 'em whatzup sent you.

Capturing Emotions in Oil

By Ben Dehr

When I walked into local oil painter Peter Lupkin's in-home studio, I was bombarded in the best way by the number of paintings, both minuscule and massive. Just a quick scan of the space showed the talent of the painter and frequent traveler (fresh off the return from an engaging trip to Guatemala) and his consistency. This consistency and his skillful craftsmanship presents itself both in color, form and subject matter, all pouring forth from expertly-executed oil-based paintings. Admittedly there are some paintings that Lupkin doesn't want anyone to see (but can't bring himself to throw out) lining the walls while they sulk on the floor. These are vastly outnumbered by the vibrant, framed faces staring back.

"I abandon things sometimes. That's why there are some things turned around out there," said Lupkin during an interview in his kitchen while his cat Gatón meowed frequently, pining for attention.

What he hasn't abandoned, however, is his day job and family business, William L. Lupkin Designs, which specializes in the creation and restoration of stained glass and mosaics. This is where Lupkin can express the more blue-collar side of artistry while retaining the finer side of creation.

"My full-time secondary job is painting. I'm going to be competing against some people who don't have to work, and if they're putting in 40 hours a week painting while I'm at my day job, it doesn't really matter; it's all about who produces more," said Lupkin. "I love my day job. Even the restoration is enjoyable, knowing that it'll be there until the next person needs to update it. At least I'm part of something this way."

Once Lupkin overcame the initial hesitation that came with painting with oil and its heavy history, he jumped in head first, appreciating both the freedom he felt and the forgiveness the paint lent to his creations. This is a helpful tool, as Lupkin paints from life, specifically people, more often than not.

"I try to paint from life as much as I can. There are times I have to paint from a photograph, but with a trained eye you can always tell. I wouldn't consider myself a classical realist or anything," he said. "I try to just capture an emotion, something that tells a story through human emotion or experience. Being a figurative painter, human beings are the most infinitely interesting and fascinating subject in the world."

Lupkin's newest set of work, the Pyrrhic series, is based on the themes of a Pyrrhic victory: a victory that causes such a toll on ing.

Another straightforward example can be seen in "Pride," also from the Pyrrhic series. The quiet smugness on the fighter's face tells us all we need to know about the person, even if it's just in that instance. Humans are constantly changing, expanding creatures, but in "Pride," Lupkin has captured the one emotion this human was experiencing most and told the story via vibrant blues, smudged pinks and strong, rich reds where the boxer's tension lies.

Working with models has its challenges, mostly financial and light-based ones. But when Lupkin is preparing his models and beginning the process, he is often surprised and grateful when the model makes a fortuitous, if unconscious choice on his or her own that pays off once a specific theme, emotion or example is set in stone.

"Each person holds themselves differently. I was working with a girl whose nervous tic was touching her ear when she was thinking. I had another original idea, but because that's how she naturally acted it worked way better. It's that way pretty regularly," said Lupkin.

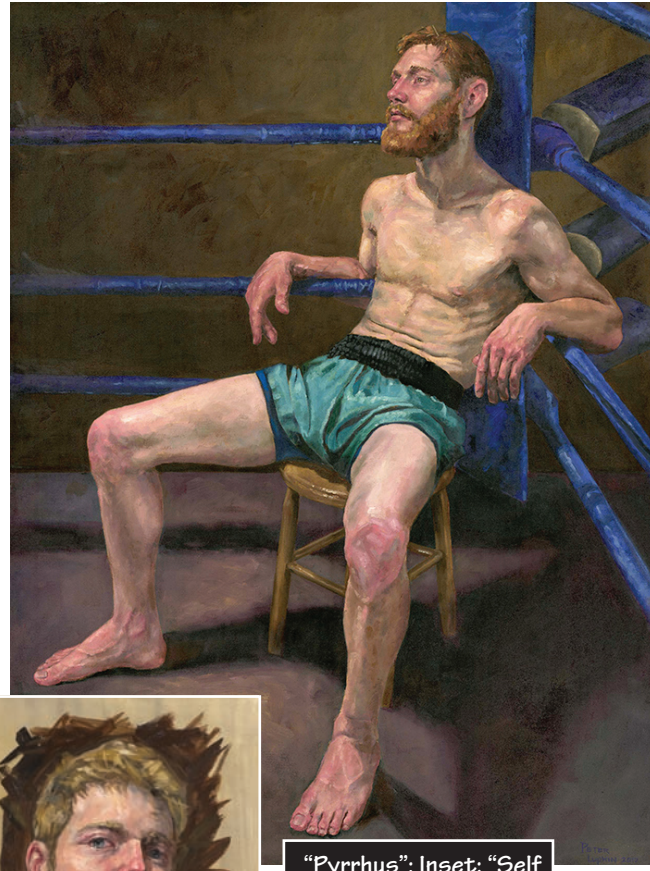

Another example can again be found within "Pyrrhus." Lupkin was setting up different poses to see which worked best, and in between poses the subject for "Pyrrhus" relaxed on his own, creating a much better emotional scene than Lupkin was trying to stage.

"It was so much better because it was natural," said Lupkin. "Sometimes you have to go through the process of setting things up to find something more instinctual and familiar to work from."

Over a year ago Lupkin went through a stylistic change, becoming more aggressive both with the actual paint and the emotional subject matter, making his paintings less clinical. He moved away from using people as props as a means to an end and really began concentrating on the emotionality of the piece as a whole. This change helped Lupkin climb into the gallery realm fairly quickly.

Lupkin worked his way up and eventually became a featured artist at Gallery Victor Armendariz in Chicago, and he sells his work almost exclusively through them. Lupkin had been in communication through the years with Armendariz who picked up Lupkin and encouraged his newer stylistic tendencies when he took over the gallery. In the freelance world, if you're lucky enough to establish yourself with a respected gallery, you don't want to screw it up.

the victor that the victory is actually more of a defeat.

"When I started thinking about this theme, I thought boxers were the ultimate image of this. Even if you're someone as good as Muhammad Ali, you may win, but you get hit in the head so much that the worth of the whole thing is questionable. Everyone makes choices like that or goes through something similar just in their lives, but I thought boxers were such a good example and that it would be familiar and relatable enough," he said.

Lupkin's piece entitled "Pyrrhus" can transport you thoroughly into the boxer's world of emotion and exertion. The look of exhaustion on the boxer's face tells more about his most recent struggle than even he could in his own words. Even the bulging veins in his feet exemplify his body's response and add that much more worth to the already expertly crafted oil on canvas paint-

Giving ABBA Their Due

By Deborah Kennedy

The story goes something like this: one night in 1995, Victoria Norback went to see an ABBA tribute band in her native Sweden. The group was terrible, and Norback, a lifelong fan of the Swedish pop group famous for 70s-era hits like “Mamma Mia” and “Dancing Queen,” was horrified.

“It was a group from Australia, and it was sing-back,” Norback remembered. “Some parts were play-back. It was only six people on stage. They spoke fake Swedish. They sang awful and not even in tune, and it was really bad to see, when you know how good ABBA was. They made fun of ABBA! The stage clothes seemed to be made at home. Nothing like ABBA at all.”

Norback, who grew up in a family of musicians (her mother was an opera singer and her grandparents ran a cabaret) decided to form her own ABBA tribute. It took some doing. At first, she recruited friends and people she knew. In 1999 she decided to use only professional musicians and singers.

“I had auditions to pick everyone in the band,” she said. “I wanted it to be first-class. And also I started to work with original ABBA musicians back in 1997. They are in the show from time to time, too, the musicians that worked with ABBA for over 10 years. The whole band is made up of musicians who went to quality performing arts schools. For example, my keyboard player was only 16 years old when he went to a conservatory for music in Switzerland. He is really a virtuoso! He can play anything. And that goes for the rest of the band, too.”

The result of Norback’s hard work is Arrival from Sweden, a 12-piece song and dance showcase that will take the Foellinger Theatre stage Saturday, July 7 at 8 p.m. as part of the venue’s summer concert series.

Since the mid 90s the men and women of Arrival have taken the music of ABBA to 60 different countries, including the U.S., one of their favorite places to perform. Americans love them some ABBA. Just look at the success of the Mamma Mia! movie franchise. (But don’t look – or listen – when Pierce Brosnan launches into song.)

“American audiences really take care of us and show us so much love and passion for what we do,” said Norback. “That keeps us going. America is a dream to tour in. The American people really know how to party and show how much they love the music of ABBA!”

Americans weren’t the first to embrace ABBA’s uniquely stylish and Swedish take on the pop formula. The phenomenon all began with the foursome’s swoon-worthy performance of “Waterloo” in Eurovision’s Song Contest. It was 1974 and ABBA’s triumphant showing was a first for Sweden. The group also went on to become the single most successful band to have competed on the show. The numbers don’t lie: roughly 500 million records sold and eight consecutive No. 1 albums in the UK alone.

Some of the success is attributable to the band’s undeniable chemistry, itself a result of the fact that the band was comprised of two married couples: Agnetha Faltskog and Bjorn Ulvaeus brought the hair, Anni-Frid Lyngstad and Benny Andersson the sequins. Just kidding. All four brought it all, all the time.

Norback thinks another secret to ABBA’s appeal is how easy the songs are on the ears. Don’t let that fool you, though.

“I grew up listening to ABBA,” Norback said. “I was really impressed by the voices of Agnetha and Anni-Frid. How they used their voices, their technique of belting and twang, so hard to do! So I learned how

The Band of Her Dreams

By Michele DeVinney

During her many years with the popular Fort Wayne band Sugar Shot, Jen Fisher had nursed a seed of inspiration in her head. While happy to continue with the country music band, Fisher was already imagining herself in a different configuration, one that would allow her to explore both an old musical form and a new contemporary twist. Knowing that Sugar Shot were set to fold at the end of 2017, she began putting her plan into action, a plan that led to Jen & the Foggy Creek Band.

"I knew I wanted to do something with bluegrass and the blues. I needed to find the right people to make it happen, and I knew my first need was a banjo player. I found John Warner who's not just a great banjo player but a great guy. Then I started adding in the other pieces. With Sugar Shot ending in December, I wanted to make this new band my full-time project and started getting gigs right away. So I kept adding people so that we could put together a full summer of concerts."

Now she performs with a full band that gives her plenty of musical power not only to play the bluegrass and Americana sound she heard in her head but to provide some unexpected elements as well. That band now includes John Foxworthy on drums and vocals, Jonah Leatherman on lead guitar, Tommy Myers on mandolin, accordion, saxophone, bass and vocals, Dave Nelson and Leland Nelson on bass, Colleen Phillips on fiddle and vocals and Celia Price on keyboards. When Leatherman isn't available, Steve Brady joins in on lead guitar. It's a big group, but it has fulfilled Fisher's long-held dreams for this band. And then some.

"Tommy Myers is a multi-instrumentalist and plays darn near every instrument God put on this earth. He was the bass player for Sugar Shot, but by bringing in Dave Nelson to play bass, it allows Tommy to fill in on all these other instruments so we can change up the sound as we go. Celia Price is on keys, and I wasn't initially planning on having keyboards, since I was thinking of a more traditional bluegrass sound, but the keys gives us bluegrass with a blues edge which has allowed us to create our own musical style."

Fisher is pleased with the sound of a band that has not only captured what she heard in her head but taken it to a different dimension.

"We're talking bluegrass and adding elements of rock and blues and giving it an edge I didn't expect initially. It's a style not quite like anything else I've heard or any other band out there. We started playing together last year, which was ahead of what I was planning, and then I started booking gigs and hitting all the goals I had for the first year. In 25 years of playing music, each band I've had comes closer and closer to what I've been envisioning and closer to the music that I wanted it to be like."

Since this band has been Fisher's dream for so long, it's been gratifying to her to have her fellow musicians and band-mates so quickly understand and adapt to her plan.

"It's really exciting when you're working with musicians who see the vision you have and help you develop it into what I wanted but also expand it beyond what my original vision was. We're really coming into our own space, and it's been a lot of fun. This project lets me do all the music I want to do and like to listen to."

For those wondering what exactly that music might be, Fisher says they have three different elements to their setlist: one-third is original music, one-third obscure Americana and one-third classic rock and contemporary pop – with a twist.

"We might do a song by Brandi Carlisle and then something by Mumford & Sons," says Fisher. "We also do a version of 'Uptown Funk' that has a cool blues feel, a really neat vibe. The keys give it the blues feel, and we fill in the background with bluegrass. We also do a cool version of 'Boys of Summer,' some Irish stuff and some old time country like Johnny Cash. The music is all over the place, but the roots vibe connects us as a band."

With upcoming gigs at Rock the Plaza on July 7, Fort Wayne Pride on July 28, Living Fort Wayne Concert Series on August 1 and Jefferson Pointe Friday Nights Live on August 3, Fisher is riding high with this band that has already made her happy in so many ways, bringing a new kind of music to an already diverse musical community.

"I just hope everybody likes it as much as we like playing it."

Justin Sweatt

Say Your Goodbyes

For quite a few years now Justin Sweatt has released music as Xander Harris. The music of Xander Harris has moved through dark techno, EDM, heavy synth, ambient and even elements of synth pop, all with the confidence of an artist who's sure of himself and what he wants to convey. I don't know Sweatt, so maybe he's not a shy introvert in his everyday life. Maybe he's just as big a personality as the music of Xander Harris sounds to be. But after listening to Say Your Goodbyes, the first album Sweatt has released under his own name, I'd go out on a limb and say that at least a part of him is more reflective and inward-looking than his persona Xander Harris.

Say Your Goodbyes, a remarkable collection of songs filled with longing and beauty, feels like a period at the end of some grand statement. It's much less about dark electronica and more about making amends, whether it be with estranged relationships or with yourself.

"The Girl with the Diamond Tattoo" sets the album's tone. It's a wistful, wide-eyed conversation of a song, a contemplative walk on the shoreline or a sunset car ride to nowhere in-particular. Simple, breezy percussion and hazy keys make this the kind of song you want in your head when taking the next step towards something new. "Booze Clues" puts me in mind of, Risky Business-era Tangerine Dream. Or those contemplative moments on Miami Vice. This is a late night cruise lit by neon lights. "A Light Boils Dim" veers into Vangelis territory. There's a regal feel in the sparseness of the track. "Chasing Paper" has a feel that's much lighter than previous Xander Harris tracks.

Listening to Say Your Goodbyes, I can't help but feel this is a musical side of Justin Sweatt that he's wanted to share for some time. While not a 180 degree turn from his Xander Harris work, it does display a new tone, one that feels decidedly more sunlit and positive. He seems to be conveying a hopefulness in tracks like "Touching From A Distance," "Hello, Lonesome" and "Eternal Return." Or if not hopefulness, at least a wide-eyed honesty about where he is in the world now. No dark tones and pulsating beats. Just a raw energy coming from a new outlook. A guarded optimism.

I, like the rest of those Xander Harris fans out there, hope there's more coming from Xander Harris. But if Say Your Goodbyes is indeed an ending to a musical era for the persona known as Xander Harris, I can say it's a truly great start for a musician named Justin Sweatt. (John Hubner)

Kids See Ghosts

Kids See Ghosts

The third record of five in Kanye West's summer-long series of mini-albums is perhaps the one that will ultimately feel the most like a complete, cohesive work – this because Kids See Ghosts is a group record in which Kanye collaborates with Kid Cudi, who is known for his love of the album as a piece of singular work. Along the way, as Kudi and Kanye have collaborated and admired one another, we've seen Kanye in regular admiration of Kudi as an all-around artistic spirit, at one point even suggesting he was the most creative musician currently working (ha!). They've fought like brothers, and now, finally, they're acting like family, collaborating on a soulful, heartfelt record that feels to be equal parts of both artist.

The resulting record is, like all of the releases in Kanye's "summer series," a quick, breezy listen with a lot of character; unlike the other records we've heard so far, Kids See Ghosts is more elaborate in production style, more focused and, rightfully so, the most interesting Kanye production work we've heard in some time. Maybe it's simply what the concepts (mental health and Christianity) of the record demands, but I think we have to thank Cudi for the more album-minded approach. And, obviously, Kanye's longtime secret weapon in the studio, legendary hip-hop studio guy Mike Dean, is hanging around, helping with the heavy lifting, keeping Ye on track.

Kanye's not a great emcee. His rhyme schemes have only gotten worse over the years, and he's never explored what he can do with his voice outside of the anomaly that is 808s and Heartbreak. His writing is self-obsessed, with a focus on humor, puns and clever

BACKTRACKS

Grin

All Out 1973)

In the family tree of rock n' roll, Nils Lofgren is a pretty heavy branch. Born in Chicago, he started playing at an early age, was "discovered" by Neil Young while playing in Grin, and ended up being a member of Crazy Horse and, oh yeah, also has played with Bruce Springsteen since 1984 and continues to tour as a solo artist.

This, the third record from Grin, has a nice blend of 70s soft rock in opener "Sad Letter," then takes a thicker sound with great guitars in the bluesy number "Heavy Chevy." It feels like a Joe Walsh track and has veins of funk running through it without getting too complicated. "Love Again" brings the tempo down again with another romantic ballad featuring smooth backing vocals and a sweet piano arrangement. "She Ain't Right" balances funk and blues again and has the great backing vocals from Kathi McDonald, who performed with Ike & Tina as an Ikette and sang with the Stones.

"Love or Else" is rootsy pop and has elements of both AM radio 70s rock and modern rock from the early 80s. "Heart on Fire" has a Southern California rock sound to it and some intricate layers of guitars that blend perfectly with more gritty backing vocals from McDonald. Like much of Lofgren's solo stuff from the 80s, it still sounds fresh almost five decades later. The album closes with the title track followed by "Rusty Gun," a somber number with Western guitars that blends bluegrass with country-blues. A beautiful song, it wraps up a great album from a band that produced just four albums in three years.

Lofgren continues an illustrious career with over 20 albums to his credit, and is recording an album due out next year. (Dennis Donahue) phrases that are maybe a tenth as bright, colorful, insightful and enlightened as he seems to think they are. You can get away with such shortcomings in hip-hop, because the genre is often judged less on quality than it is on character, mood or listenability. But to the real "heads," Kanye's rhymes are something to endure, not enjoy – words we have to put up with if we want to hear his always imaginative production ideas. Kid Cudi is more interesting on the mic, and he finds ways to diversify his vocal performances better than most of the current emcees, but he is still not someone I would ever consider a great rapper.

That said, Kids See Ghosts is not really about vocal performance or lyrics. It's about mood, theme and vibe. It's a mostly chill, progressive-minded collection of seven shortish songs made to appeal more so to fans of Cudi and modern hip-hop than it is Kanye and Kanye's boom-bap roots. Whether or not that's a good thing depends on the listener; me, I don't really love it. I appreciate the camaraderie we hear on the record, and, as an overall piece of work, I think it's a win, if mostly for Kanye, whose presence overwhelms Cudi. It's not an album I suspect people will be talking about in a few months, but for now it's an interesting new chapter in the Kanye saga, complete with three – yeah, just three – must-hear tracks and some undeniably interesting production. Here's hoping the next record in Kanye's "summer series," a Nas album produced entirely by Kanye, is worthy of the collaborator. (Greg W. Locke)

"Victor has given me such an opportunity and such freedom that I never want to mess that up. I really respect him, and I'm so lucky to be able to be showing where I am," Lupkin said.

As my eyes wandered over the different portraits in Lupkin's studio/living room, it was almost overwhelming how much talent was hiding there in plain view. If anyone deserves windows as walls, it's Peter Lupkin. Maybe his models, laying nude on an antique couch or staring into the distance as they graze a cheek with their fingertips, would get nervous, but the chance to see Lupkin create such works of art would be worth it.

"I have the opportunity to create my own world, in its entirety," said Lupkin. "It's only my skill that can limit what I can do. That drives a lot of my passion. I am free."

Wooden Nickel CD of the Week

MIKE SHINODA POST TRAUMATIC

The first solo album from Linkin Park's Mike Shinoda is a work of unflinching introspection. An expansion of the EP that Shinoda released in January, this full-length project delves further into the aftermath of the death of Chester Bennington. The songs on the album are Shinoda's way of coping, and its release is his way of sharing a musical catharsis with Linkin Park's fans, emphasizing the message that better days are ahead. Get Post Traumatic for just $11.99 at all Wooden Nickel Music stores.

Sweetwater Summer Just Beginning

Another successful GearFest has come and gone. Is it just me, or does this thing keep getting bigger and better every year? I mean, did you see the number of folks who made their way out for the festivities during the two-day span? Many of those folks traveled miles to check out the latest gear and to treat their ears and eyes to an elite group of presenters and performers. If you didn't have the opportunity to attend this year, make it a point to do so next year. The dates have already been set: June 21-22, 2019.

Straight off the heels of GearFest, The Sweetwater Sound Performance Pavilion still has a number of great acts set to take the stage in the upcoming months, including The Marshall Tucker Band (August 11), Average White Band (August 23), Blackberry Smoke (August 24), Night Ranger (August 25), Lee Ann Womack and Marty Stuart & His Fabulous Superlatives (September 15), Rick Braun & Peter White (September 22) and The Charlie Daniels Band (October 6). Good stuff!

Another event taking place at Sweetwater is Stoney Fest from 2-6 p.m. on Sunday, July 22. The event honors Aaron Stone who passed away last year at the age of 18 after a courageous battle with cancer. Stone was a committed musician who began playing drums at age eight and continued to play until he was no longer physically able to do so. All proceeds from the event will go to the Aaron M. Stone Memorial Fund which helps support kids and their families with pediatric cancer and to nurture musical interests in kids with few resources or opportunities. Stoney Fest will feature live music in the pavilion by U.R.B., Lemert Beeler Klee Trio, The Legendary Trainhoppers, Jake Miller and The Troy School with special guest Carson Cox. Local food trucks will also be on site. Advance tickets are available for $15 at Sweetwater, Wooden Nickel and Studio 13 Tattoo. Kids 12 and under are free with an adult. To find out more about the event and the Aaron M. Stone Memorial Fund, go to www.aaronfund.org.

Hometown girl Lauren Sanderson will be returning to the Fort next month for a performance at CS3. The alternative hip-hop pop artist recently signed a deal with Epic Records and moved to Los Angeles to fulfill her dream. Back in March she released a brand new single entitled "Written in the Stars," and a full-length major label debut is on the way. Sanderson will be in town on Friday, July 7 as part of her Trust the Universe Tour. This all-ages show begins at 6 p.m. Tickets can be purchased through Eventbrite and are $10, with VIP tickets going for $55. The VIP includes a personal photo, Polaroid photo, autograph, tour poster and lots of Lauren's energy.

to sing like them. And the music. So good, so well played, and produced ... all of their songs are so different from each other ... very easy to listen to, but very hard to sing and play.

ABBA's first performance was in 1970 when the two pairs of lovebirds went on vacation together to Cyprus. Not that they called themselves ABBA yet, and not that the performance was exactly planned. They launched into song on the beach in front of an assemblage of United Nations soldiers, and the warm reception they received there prompted them to try their hand at a stage show back home in Gothenburg, Sweden.

The show, titled Fästfolk (which translates to "Engaged Couples" and "Party People") was panned, and the four musicians pursued other opportunities for a time. Andersson and Ulvaeus recorded together under the name Björn and Benny, eventually breaking onto the charts with "Hello, Old Man," "No Doctor Can Help with That" and "Say It with a Song." Faltskog and Lyngstad worked solo as singers. Later, when Faltskog and Lyngstad again joined their husbands in making music, their manager decided they needed a catchy name. They landed on ABBA because it was an acronym of their first names. (It's also the name of a Swedish fish-canning company, but that's a story for another day.)

In 1974 they struck Eurovision gold with "Waterloo" which they sang in English instead of Swedish. It turned out to be a fateful choice. An impossibly catchy take on love as an act of surrender, "Waterloo" reached No. 1 on the UK charts and climbed to the sixth spot in the U.S. An international tour followed, but it would be two more years before ABBA really became a household name.

In 1976 the group made yet another odd and fateful decision. They released a greatest hits album, despite having only six songs on regular rotation. The album went to No. 1 in the UK and sold more than a million copies in the U.S. Suddenly, songs like "SOS," "Mamma Mia" and "Fernando" were playing everywhere. Resistance, as they say, was futile.

And then came Arrival, the album for which Norback's group is named. It introduced the world to "Dancing Queen," "Money, Money, Money" and "Knowing Me, Knowing You." It also was the best-selling album of 1977.

The late 70s was ABBA's world and everyone else was just living in it – and, if they were listening to ABBA, living it up in it. World tours, mass hysteria, and press junkets followed. One of their sold-out shows even included a high-drama, high-stakes bomb scare. They put out The Album, Voulez-Vous and Super Trouper.

Worldwide fame had its down sides. In the early 80s both marriages fell apart, and even though ABBA continued to tour and make music together, the band's heyday was over. They recorded one more album, the critically acclaimed and undeniably darker and more mature The Visitors, and then the group slowly disbanded. There was never an official split, per se. They simply stopped performing, and the members have all gone on record as saying that they will not reunite. Ulvaeus has said that they want their fans to remember them as they were in the 70s: "young, exuberant, full of energy and ambition."

All pretty good words to describe Arrival, actually.

"We give it all on every concert," Norback said. "We give so much energy every time, and we treat the songs of ABBA with respect and love. Our audience feels that they are part of the show. And they can also see that we love to be on stage. That is very important."

CHRIS HUPE

Fort favorites Clutch and Sevendust have announced a fall tour together that commences in mid-September. The Book of Bad Decisions Tour, unfortunately, is not booked for Fort Wayne, but there are a couple of travel opportunities for those would like to see this interesting coupling of acts. You'll have to head north to "Pure Michigan" if you want to see the tour, as it only stops in Grand Rapids October 19 and Detroit the following night. Clutch also appear at Riot Fest in Chicago September 16.

Former America's Got Talent host Nick Cannon is taking his Wild N Out MTV show on the road this fall. The production will be, essentially, a live version of his MTV series of the same name and will feature comedy, challenges and freestyle raps and musical guests along with audience participation. This will be the first time the show will be presented live, so you know that just about anything can happen and probably will. Check it out August 17 in Chicago, August 18 in Detroit or September 6 in Columbus, Ohio.

Synth pop pioneers New Order have announced a handful of dates for North America. The band hasn't released an album since 2015 and there is no news of anything on the horizon, but you can hear the songs you already know and love when you see them headline the Incuya Music Festival in downtown Cleveland on August 25. The Incuya Festival also boasts a lineup of The Avett Brothers, SZA, Awolnation, Cake and The Revivalists, amongst others.

Rockin' on the Riverfront is a summer concert series taking place along the Detroit River in downtown Detroit. This year's lineup seems to focus on classic artists, with Vince Neil of Mötley Crüe opening things up on July 13. Detroit native Uncle Kracker plays July 20, John Kay and Steppenwolf appear July 27, Mickey Thomas of Starship stops by August 3, Survivor play their hits August 10 and WAR round things out August 17. Admission is free for all shows.

Vince Neil is also scheduled to play Firekeepers Casino in Battle Creek on August 18. Firekeepers has a pretty good lineup scheduled for the rest of the summer as well with country star Toby Keith booked July 6, country legend Reba McEntire coming August 3 and comedian Dane Cook September 14.

The Bellwether Music Festival is a new camping music festival taking place in Waynesville, Ohio August 10-11. Waynesville is about two hours southeast of Fort Wayne, between Dayton and Cincinnati. MGMT headline the event with The Flaming Lips, Echo & The Bunnymen, Local Natives, The Psychedelic Furs and Dr. Dog also drawing a lot of interest. The festival has already been named by Paste Magazine as one of the best festivals of the summer.

A 'Bombshell' With Brains

In Bombshell: The Hedy Lamarr Story, Hedy Lamarr, in interviews and archival footage, speaks often about writing the story of her life, wanting to tell her side of the story. This never happened, and as her life story unfolds in the film, it becomes clear that the task of revealing the story of her tumultuous and complicated life isn't something she really wants to reveal and would be nearly impossible to capture on the page.

Filmmaker Alexandra Dean packs a lot into her 90-minute portrait of Lamarr, but there is so much ground to cover that Lamarr's last two husbands aren't even mentioned by name. Dean wisely doesn't try to explain the very different sides of Lamarr's personality. She leaves that to Lamarr's own words, children, biographers and admirers. What she does do very well is plot the trajectory of Lamarr's groundbreaking invention, "frequency hopping."

Before her inventing successes, Lamarr had lived quite a life. Hedwig Eva Kiesler was born in Vienna in 1914 to well-to-do Jewish parents. She grew up in a happy home, attending good schools and enjoying all the cultural amenities of Vienna. She also grew up very beautiful and very intelligent.

At 16, she walked into a film studio in Vienna and was almost immediately signed to a contract. In 1933 she made a film that would haunt her for the rest of her life. The film is Ekstase (Ecstasy). The film, in which she appears nude, shows her enjoying a sexual experience. Highly shocking for the time or any time.

She marries a man, a munitions manufacturer, 14 years her senior. (He unsuccessfully tries to buy up all the prints of Ekstase.) Bored as a trophy wife and appalled that her husband is fueling Hitler's war efforts, she escapes in the dark of night and makes her way to

CATHERINE LEE

Hollywood where she is signed by Louis B. Mayer to a punishing contract.

The footage and stills of her early Hollywood career show how stunningly beautiful she was. She was imitated by other starlets and captivated many men. Numerous people recount that when Lamarr walked into a room, conversation stopped and all heads turned. People did not look beyond her beauty to credit her intelligence.

The most charming interpretation of her story is told in her own words from audio tapes made by Fleming Meeks, a journalist who in 1990 did a profile of her scientific accomplishments for Forbes magazine.

Lamarr was fascinated with how things work and was always working on inventions. Boyfriend Howard Hughes supplied her with equipment so she could work in between takes in her trailer on set. She developed plane wing designs to make planes fly faster.

Her most innovative invention was a system to allow torpedoes to be guided by a radio guidance system. By constructing a "frequency hopping" pattern, the radio communication could not be intercepted by the enemy. She patented this system and donated its use to the war effort.

The Navy rejected her ideas, basically for no other reason than she was a girl. She was subject to many

New Jurassic Film Opens Huge

Tops at the Box: J.A. Bayona's Jurassic World: Fallen Kingdom opened big, as expected, taking the No. 1 spot at last weekend's U.S. box office, selling $150 million over three days, good enough for the No. 3 all-time June opening weekend. The real story here is how well the film is selling in abroad markets, having already sold $711 million worldwide. Reviews, on the other hand, have been terrible for this one, the film receiving just a 51/100 on Metacritic. But that doesn't really matter for this kind of film, does it? Films with dinosaurs in them aren't really made for critics or cinephiles, are they? They're made for kids and the average moviegoer as adrenaline pieces built to be nothing more than entertainment. And, by those standards, it seems as if Fallen Kingdom is delivering despite some notable competition.

Also at the Box: Brad Bird's Incredibles 2 continued to roll over its second weekend, selling another $81 million, bringing the flick's 10-day U.S. sales total to $350 million. With almost $500 million in worldwide sales in less than two weeks, this one has all the makings of a new classic and, beyond that, it's on pace to be the most profitable Pixar film to date.

Ocean's 8 continued to underperform over its third weekend of release, selling another $11 million, good enough for the No. 3 spot. So far, Ocean's 8, a movie I think a whole lot of people will download, rent and stream, has sold $100 million in the U.S. and $171 million worldwide.

Ensemble action-comedy Tag, starring Jeremy Renner in a very physical role (filmed while having two broken arms, even), took the No. 4 spot, selling

ScreenTime

GREG W. LOCKE

$8.2 million and bringing the flick's 10-day domestic sales total to just over $30 million. I saw this one within the last week and yeah, sure, it was a good time. There's really nothing too special to say about the film, other than that it features a whole lot of great 90s-era hip-hop, opening with a Pharcyde track before a Tribe Called Quest-backed montage kicks in. This is a good one to watch on a bored night at home, as there's nothing especially cinematic about it that would demand you see it on the big screen.

Deadpool 2 rounded out last weekend's U.S. Top 5 with $5.2 million in sales. So far, the flick has sold a whopping $304 million domestically and $707 million worldwide. Sounds like a lot of money, right? Well get this: there have been nine films in the last 365 days that have sold more than $707 million. Nine!

Also of note: Avengers: Infinity War is finally slowing down, and just as it was about to surpass The Force Awakens as the No. 3 best grossing film of all time. Assuming that the top two spots on said list, Avatar and Titanic, are untouchable, almost hitting that No. 3 mark (which Infinity War is just $38 million away from at $2.03 billion in worldwide sales) would have been quite an achievement.

First Presbyterian Theater presents

David Rousculp's MY DEAD CLOWN
July 12-22, 2018

This world-premiere from local playwright David Rousculp is a two-time award-winning script. It has Bill, a grieving undertaker, one step from being fired, when he accidentally brings a dead clown back to life. A funny and heartwarming (and a bit macabre) story of hope kicks off the FPT season.

humiliations regarding her invention, including learning late in life that the military had eventually used her patent without her permission. Dean documents many developers of "frequency hopping" who credit Lamarr with the idea. She has been recognized often in recent years as the inventor of this technology which is the basis for wi-fi and Bluetooth. Today, the film tells us, this innovation is worth about $30 billion dollars.

Lamarr's career stalled multiple times. She was rarely given a role that showcased her talent. She was routinely cast as the bombshell, and those pictures, like White Cargo and Samson and Delilah, did well at the box office. Clips from her more serious roles show an actress with real talent and charisma.

Fed uppers and downers by the studio for years, she experienced an addiction to methamphetamines. She had many plastic surgeries that left her so despondent about her looks that she became a recluse, rarely seeing even her family. Through all of this she remained remarkably resilient and lacking bitterness. She is charming, full of humor and acceptance, even after experiences that would sour most souls.

"Any girl can be glamorous. All you have to do is stand still and look stupid." Those words are Lamarr's. She was glamorous, but never stupid.

Oh, and one last box office-related tidbit: A movie called ... wait for it ... Lobster Cop had $35,000 in ticket sales last weekend. Lobster Cop, they named their movie Lobster Cop. Incredible.

New This Week: I'm a big fan of basketball films. I'm a big fan of Boston Celtics point guard Kyrie Irving. And I'm an even bigger fan of New York City-set films. Charles Stone III's Uncle Drew, a basketball film starring Kyrie Irving as a white-haired street ball legend who has to reunite his old crew (featuring Shaquille O'Neal, Chris Webber, Reggie Miller, Nate Robinson and Lisa Leslie) for a tournament at New York City's Rucker Classic, looks like a stinker. That said, I'm a jaded 38-year-old man, so this one probably isn't aimed at me. It'll be interesting to see how a basketball comedy starring a bunch of non-actors will fare among the critics; I'll guess that Uncle Drew gets a 48/100 on Metacritic and flops at the box office.

Also out everywhere this weekend is action sequel Sicario: Day of the Soldado, starring Benicio del Toro and Josh Brolin and shot by the great Dariusz Wolski. Day of the Soldado is one of the summer's great curiosities, with no one quite knowing what to expect. The first film, directed by Denis Villeneuve and written by Taylor Sheridan, didn't do well at the box office but is cult classic as well as a hit among critics. Soldado doesn't involve either Sheridan or Villeneuve, both of whom are often mentioned as two of the best working artists in their field. Also, the star of the first film, Emily Blunt, has no involvement. Somehow, though, this film is getting a lot of buzz and will open everywhere, seemingly all off the strength of the Sicario name. Looks for this one, too, to flop, as the competition is just too strong right now.

Also out, albeit in very limited release, is the very well reviewed Dark River, starring Sean Bean and Ruth Wilson.
